

Suspect in Minnesota shootings in custody

Alleged gunman detained in ‘politically motivated’ killing of state lawmaker

BY PATRICK MARLEY AND MERYL KORNFIELD

MINNEAPOLIS — The man suspected of shooting two Democratic lawmakers and their spouses in their homes in what officials describe as politically motivated attacks was captured Sunday evening after authorities scoured the area around where he had a home in Sibley County after a sprawling manhunt involving more than 100 officers, according to two state officials and a social media post by a county sheriff.

For nearly two days, authorities had been searching for 57-year-old Vance Luther Boelter, a resident of Green Isle, Minnesota, a rural town about 45 miles southwest of the Twin Cities.

The manhunt had begun after a gunman opened fire on state Sen. John Hoffman and his wife in the quiet Minneapolis suburb of Champlin early Saturday before driving about 10 miles to the neighboring suburb of Brooklyn Park, home to state Rep. Melissa Hortman, the former speaker of the Minnesota House.

Hortman and her husband, Mark, were shot and killed, while Hoffman and his wife, Yvette, survived and remain hospitalized in serious condition.

The suspect in the case posed as a police officer to gain entry to the homes of the two lawmakers, authorities have said. The gunman fled after a shootout with police following the second of the two predawn attacks, leaving be-

SEE MINNESOTA ON A4

Targeting officials: Slayings stoke fears as political divide deepens. A3

Melissa Hortman: Slain lawmaker hailed as “a giant in Minnesota.” A4

SAUL MARTINEZ/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

More migrants may exit than enter

U.S. policies could drive reversal, first in 50 years, in 2025, economists find

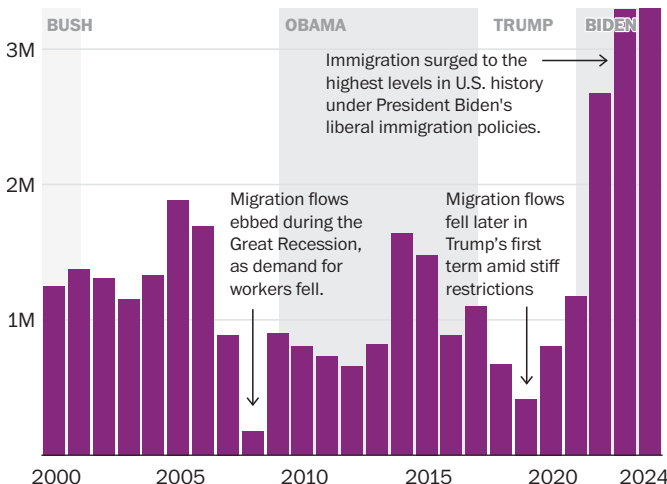

BY ANDREW ACKERMAN AND LAUREN KAORI GURLEY

For the first time in at least half a century, more people may leave the United States than arrive this year, an abrupt shift in immigration patterns with potentially significant implications for the U.S. economy.

Economists at two Washington think tanks expect President Donald Trump’s immigration policies to drive this reversal: from the near-total shutdown of the southern border to threats to international students and the loss of legal status for many new arrivals,

U.S. net migration by year

For decades, more immigrants have moved to the United States than left. This year that could change.

Source: Congressional Budget Office

ADRIÁN BLANCO RAMOS AND LAUREN KAORI GURLEY / THE WASHINGTON POST

according to a forthcoming paper. A rise in deportations — the aim of recent workplace raids that triggered protests in Los Angeles and other cities — also plays a role.

A net outflow of migrants could stoke inflation, a risk economists already expect from Trump’s tariff policies. It also could renew the type of labor shortages the country experienced during the pandemic. Longer term, it could even have implications for fiscal policy, with fewer immigrants paying taxes and supporting entitlement programs such as Social Security, said one of the economists, Wendy Edelberg.

“For the year as a whole, we think it’s likely [immigration] will be negative,” Edelberg said. “It certainly would be the first time in

SEE IMMIGRATION ON A7

ICE memes: White House is playing immigration policies for laughs. A11

Workers at the Toby & Leon Cooperman Sinai Residences in Boca Raton, Florida, where some have lost their legal status. A paper due out this month is expected to show migrant outflows exceeding inflows this year after recent immigration surges through 2024.

U.S. probes claim that Austin Tice was killed

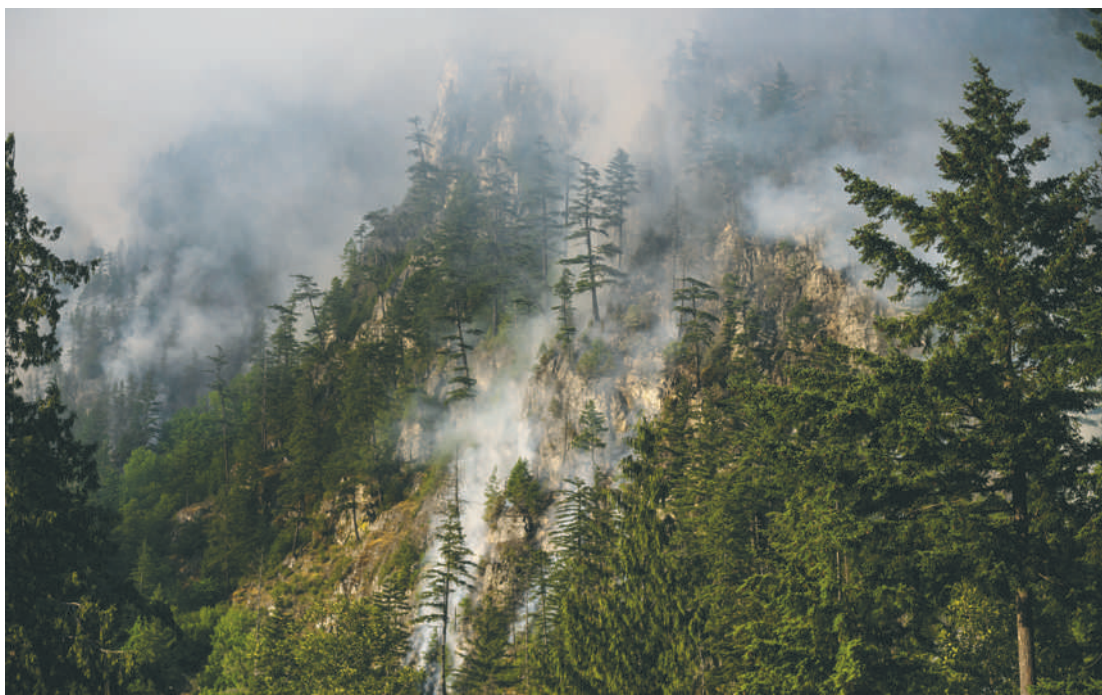

Ex-Syrian official says Assad ordered execution; family rejects account

BY ELLEN NAKASHIMA, SOUAD MEKHENNET, JOANNA SLATER AND AARON SCHAFFER

A former senior Syrian security official has told the FBI that American freelance journalist Austin Tice was killed in 2013 on the orders of President Bashar al-Assad, an account that has not been corroborated by the United States but marks the first time a senior official in the Assad regime has spoken to U.S. officials about Tice’s fate.

The U.S. government is investigating the claims made by Bassam al-Hassan, a member of Assad’s inner circle and his adviser for strategic affairs, according to U.S. officials and other people familiar with the matter, who spoke on the condition of anonymity because

SEE TICE ON A6

TUANA MARTIN/CANADIAN PRESS/AP

Smoke from the Dryden Creek wildfire north of Squamish, British Columbia, on Tuesday.

Fires may warp Canada’s landscape

Hotter, more frequent blazes could prevent regrowth of common greenery

BY RUBY MELLEN

Hundreds of wildfires are burning in Canada — and they could change the way the country looks.

Scientists say the blazes could transform parts of the Canadian landscape, as more intense and more frequent fires push forests to adapt and prevent certain common Canadian trees from regrowing.

More than 200 fires burned across Canada as of Sunday, their smoke sweeping across oceans and continents. More than 80 of them were burning “out of control,” according to the Canadian Interagency Forest Fire Centre. Fire is part of the Canadian landscape. Millions of acres can burn each year, and the country’s native plants are hardwired to endure the effects of wildfire — to an extent.

But — as is the case with most wildfire-prone areas — drier conditions and warmer weather due

SEE CANADA ON A14

Allies hope a mercurial president goes their way

G-7 leaders will aim to coax Trump to align on tariffs, Ukraine and more

BY CLEVE R. WOOTSON JR., AMANDA COLETTA, DAVID J. LYNCH AND ANNABELLE TIMSIT

CALGARY, ALBERTA — Leaders of the world’s major economies will gather here Monday hoping to persuade a mercurial U.S. president to preserve long-standing alliances and calm a jittery global landscape but, in some cases, are willing to go their own way if they do not succeed.

President Donald Trump will attend this year’s Group of Seven summit in the foothills of the Canadian Rockies amid deep anxiety among the United States’ traditional economic allies. These nations hope to persuade him to continue scaling back the punishing tariffs he has imposed across the world, but they also aim to avoid the kind of confrontation that some world leaders have set off while meeting with Trump in his first and second terms.

International economic uncertainty has expanded in Trump’s second term. In April he announced the highest U.S. tariffs in a century, only to suspend them for 90 days to permit negotiations for new trade deals. Only the United Kingdom has achieved a “framework” of a deal, while China and the U.S. have agreed to a trade war truce while they pursue a broader negotiation.

The G-7 has historically served as a forum for the free world’s strongest economies to talk about their shared interests on trade, security and climate policy — but Trump has upended those interests by imposing tariffs, arguing for the annexation of Canada as the 51st state and threatening to use military force to take over Greenland, a mineral-rich island territory controlled by Denmark.

Even on the conflict between Israel and Iran, whose dueling missile strikes are sure to dominate discussions in Canada, the U.S. is in some ways out of sync with the rest of the G-7 members. Other nations are generally tougher on Israel because of humanitarian concerns in Gaza, and they also see themselves as tougher on Iran because so many of them backed the deal struck by President Barack Obama — and blown up by Trump in his first term — to contain Iran’s nuclear program.

A similar dynamic hangs over the war in Ukraine, with Trump

SEE G-7 ON A2

IN THE NEWS

After the pageantry and protests D.C. began returning to normalcy after the military parade, during which no arrests were made related to demonstrations, police said. B1

A stunner at the U.S. Open J.J. Spaun secures his first major championship to cap a wet and wild final round at Oakmont Country Club. D1

THE NATION Voice of America recalled about 75 employees to work amid the Iran-Israel conflict. A2 Police used rubber bullets and stun grenades against protesters Saturday in Los Angeles. A5

THE WORLD An underground field hospital offers an answer to what Ukrainians say is Russia’s targeting of medical facilities. A8 France’s president visited Greenland in a show of European support. A10

THE ECONOMY Two Hollywood titans’ lawsuit against an AI firm isn’t about stopping the technology, experts say. It’s about making sure they get a cut. A11

THE REGION Suing the president is a key issue in the Democratic primary for Virginia attorney general. B1

Fairfax County prosecutors want to use an interview with a young girl against her father, accused of killing her mother and another man with an au pair’s help. B1 For one couple, the Trump administration’s travel ban means the indefinite postponement of their wedding. B1

STYLE Jacinda Ardern is on a mission to humanize politicians with “Prime Minister,” a revealing new film about her life as New Zealand’s leader. C1 A parade billed as a display of military might turned out to be a history lesson, Philip Kennicott writes. C1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A11 COMICS.....C5 OBITUARIES.....B4 OPINION PAGES.....A12 TELEVISION.....C4 WORLD NEWS.....A8

CONTENT © 2025 The Washington Post Year 148, No. 54249

