

Chicago Tribune

$4.00 | TUESDAY, JULY 14, 2026 | CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

US putting strait blockade back on

In reversal, Trump plans to charge toll for use of key route

By Jon Gambrell and Josh Boak
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — The U.S. announced a new round of strikes on Iran on Monday, hours after President Donald Trump said Washington is “reinstating” a blockade on Iran in the Strait of Hormuz and, in a seeming policy reversal, will charge other ships for safe passage.

All of that comes as Iran has insisted it actually controls the critical waterway, and as the new exchange of fire threatened a return to all-out war.

U.S. Central Command announced on social media that the U.S. military had begun another round of strikes against Iran.

“These strikes will continue imposing a heavy cost on Iranian forces and degrade their ability to attack innocent civilians and commercial shipping in the Strait of Hormuz,” the U.S. military said.

The new round of attacks followed Trump telling conservative radio host Hugh Hewitt, “We’re going to hit them very hard tonight and we’re going to hit them hard tomorrow — and there’s not a damn thing they can do about it.”

“They have nothing,” Trump added. “They have nothing going, other than they have big mouths.”

The attacks followed the U.S. changing a policy that, until now, said the strait should remain open to all without tolls — as it was before the U.S. and Israel attacked Iran on Feb. 28. Any attempt by the U.S. or Iran to charge fees would violate global norms on freedom of navigation and raise tensions, likely causing further economic disruption far beyond the region.

The price for a barrel of Brent crude oil, the international standard, rose 7.8% to $81.92 a barrel on Monday, still well below the nearly $120 reached at the height of the war.

Trump also told Hewitt that the agreement reached last month was “built to test” Iran, adding that “when you’re dealing with sleazebags don’t mean much.”

Trump said he questioned why the U.S. was entering into a deal to create a ceasefire with Iran rather than moving toward a full deal first. Trump last week declared the ceasefire was “over.”

“They didn’t honor the test,” the president said.

Exchanges of fire in recent days,

See IRAN on Page A9

U of C law school targets devices

Phones, tablets and more banned from some classrooms

By Kate Perez
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Come fall, first-year students at the University of Chicago Law School will be prohibited from using electronic devices like laptops, tablets and phones in the classroom throughout the 2026-27 academic year. The new policy comes as artificial intelligence continues to affect the higher education landscape and schools grapple with how to handle the ever-evolving technology.

The policies aim to foster what the law school is calling “AI-resilient teaching and assessment” across the school’s first-year law core classes, including civil procedure, torts and constitutional law, among others, according to a statement posted by the university.

Students can also expect for examinations to be taken in class without access to the internet, electronic files, or apps.

“This coordinated approach reflects our experience, and an emerging scholarly consensus, that active, in-person engagement is conducive to learning,” the release stated. “Reliance on devices to take notes or assist with answering questions tends to inhibit reflection and reasoning.”

There will be some potential exceptions to the deviceless classroom policy, however, the school said. Professors can opt to designate students as classroom “scribes” and allow them to use electronic devices to take notes for the class as well as authorize the use of devices for “specific tech-enabled activities,” the release states.

The policy changes also do not mean an entire outcasting of AI for the school.

Going forward, AI usage could fluctuate class to class as students

See DEVICES on Page A4

“I’m incredibly grateful that they decided to take this chance on me, but I’m also very glad that I didn’t know that I was the first.” — ELIZABETH WEHRLE, recipient of a quadruple-organ transplant at Northwestern Memorial Hospital

Elizabeth Wehrle, left, meets with lung transplant nurse practitioner Jennifer Wright at Northwestern Memorial Hospital on Monday. Wehrle is going home after receiving a new kidney, liver and lungs after complications from her first lung transplant. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/TRIBUNE

Northwestern performs rare quadruple-organ transplant

Procedure for woman who had past lung transplant is possibly first of its kind

By Lisa Schencker
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Before she went into surgery, Elizabeth Wehrle knew that doctors wanted to transplant four new organs into her body.

She didn’t know, at the time, that the operation at Northwestern Memorial Hospital was potentially the first of its kind in the country — a quadruple-organ transplant performed on a person who had already had a previous lung transplant.

“I’m incredibly grateful that they decided to take this chance on me, but I’m also very glad that I didn’t know that I was the first,” Wehrle, 36, of Montezuma, Iowa, said with a laugh Monday.

Though seven quadruple-organ transplants have been performed in the U.S. in recent years, Wehrle is the first known person to get a liver, a kidney and a second set of donor lungs, after her body rejected lungs she received during an earlier transplant and after her liver and kidney were damaged by cystic fibrosis, according to Northwestern, citing information from the Scientific Registry of Transplant Recipients.

A quadruple-organ transplant is always a complex surgery, but Wehrle’s case was especially difficult given her previous lung transplant. A lung transplant can leave dense scars and distort a person’s natural anatomy, making a second lung transplant trickier than a first one, according to Northwestern doctors.

“This is a young woman who really had no options and she really had nowhere else to go, and we were able to apply the power of transplant to be able to save her life in a way that had not ever been done before,” said Dr. Satish Nadig, transplant surgeon and director of the Northwestern Medicine Comprehensive Trans-

See SURGERY on Page A2

How would Indiana pay for a Bears stadium?

Analysts look at state’s paths to handling debt, while some residents balk at additional taxes

By Robert McCoppin
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

A buyer should beware of a Bentley on sale for half price, says public finance analyst Geoffrey Propheeter. So should the public on a sports stadium, Propheeter says.

“With sports facilities, few lawmakers ever ask what’s behind the curtain,” Propheeter, an associate professor at the University of Colorado Denver, told the Tribune. “They are so in love with what they see that they ignore what they can’t see.”

In February, Indiana lawmakers approved a plan to spend up to $1 billion to build an enclosed stadium in Hammond for the Chicago Bears. The team pledged to pay $2 billion toward building the stadium, and would then lease the site but collect all of the operating revenue.

But whether the planned taxes in the legislation would be enough to pay off the construction cost is highly uncertain, some analysts say. Just as whether the Bears will move to Indiana depends on whether Illinois will make a

See STADIUM on Page A2

A possible stadium site for the Bears includes the Wolf Lake Industrial Center along Wolf Lake and Interstate 90, top right, near the state line in Hammond, as seen on July 1. BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE

TALIA SPRAGUE/FOR THE TRIBUNE

Billy Idol’s still vital

The rock singer’s recent resurgence brought him Sunday to the Ravinia Festival, where he and a seven-piece ensemble anchored by longtime guitarist Steve Stevens gave the multigenerational audience a crash course in ’80s-inspired fun, style and sound.

Arts & Living

SUBSCRIPTION

Visit myaccount.chicagotribune.com or call 312-546-7900 to sign up for a subscription. To place an ad, visit placeanad.chicagotribune.com.

WEATHER FORECAST

TODAY H: 97 L: 75
WED. H: 97 L: 77
THU. H: 94 L: 73
Complete details on Page A14

INDEX

Almanac A9
Arts & Living B7
Comics B10-11
Crossword B11
Editorials A6
Horoscope B10
Nation & World B4
Obituaries A9
Television B9

179th year No. 195
© Chicago Tribune

