

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

THURSDAY, MAY 29, 2025

ICE arrests rattle Islands

40 immigrants sent to mainland

By Samantha J. Gross and Danny McDonald

GLOBE STAFF

OAK BLUFFS — As the summer season ramps up on Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, federal agents descended on the tony islands, arrested 40 immigrants, and swiftly brought them to the mainland.

Photos and videos of the detained immigrants, wearing neon life jackets, circulated online as they were taken off the islands in Coast Guard boats.

The sweeping enforcement action Tuesday offered the starkest reminder yet that in every part of Massachusetts, as temperatures climb, this is shaping up to be another season of Trump.

The effect of the raid reverberated across the islands just as they were emerging into full summer thrum, and left even immigrants with citizenship and legal status feeling tense.

"We're the only Indians here," said Uma Batta, 56, of Oak Bluffs. Her family, immigrants from New Delhi, own a gift shop in town, and have been

IMMIGRATION, Page A7

Rising youth violence in Chelsea hits home hard

By Dan Glaun

GLOBE STAFF

CHELSEA — Flor Daniela Lemus held in her lap a photograph of her son Juan Carlos from 10 years ago, on his first day of second grade, under a row of maple trees outside the Mary C. Burke Elementary Complex. He was giving a thumbs-up, a sign of promise for their new life here, 2,200 miles from the gangland violence they had fled in their native El Salvador.

In March, that is where he died, at 17 years old: fatally stabbed next to those same trees by the school. A life cut short by violence his mother had tried desperately to keep at bay.

"I wanted to give my son a better education," Lemus said. "A better future."

Juan Carlos's killing and other recent incidents of youth violence have reopened wounds in Chelsea, a place where young people are becoming victims of violent crime in numbers not seen in more than a decade. Chelsea officials said they are

CHELSEA, Page A10

Again, a Market Basket power struggle

CEO Demoulas put on paid leave as board, representing his sisters' interests, says it's probing whether he'd lead a walkout

By Jon Chesto

GLOBE STAFF

Another power struggle erupted inside the Market Basket grocery empire on Wednesday when the company board's executive committee placed longtime chief executive Arthur T. Demoulas on paid leave, saying it's investigating whether he was considering leading a work stoppage that could disrupt the business.

In an email to Market Basket's employees, the executive committee said it suspects a work disruption was being considered as a potential retaliatory measure against the board "for requiring that the CEO work collaboratively with the Board regarding basic company operations and plans."

A spokesperson for Demoulas, Justine Griffin, issued a brief statement saying the chief executive had been ousted from his position by his three sisters, all shareholders in the chain, and their three appointed board members. Demoulas's daughter, Madeline, and his son, Telemachus, were also placed on leave, as well as several others, she confirmed.

"The company is currently operating at its peak performance and the notion that this board is going to conduct an investigation is a farcical cover for a hostile takeover," Griffin said.

Tensions between board members and the popular CEO have simmered over the past year, with three of the four directors increasingly frustrated over what they contend was Demoulas's refusal to respond to or comply with what they considered to be reasonable requests and basic oversight, including providing access to key Market Basket managers and allowing them more involvement in his succession planning.

Now, those three directors, all members of the company's executive committee, said they have hired law firm Quinn Emanuel to look into Demou-

DEMOULAS, Page A6

'There's no organization. I was scared that today would be the same as yesterday.'

JALAL AL-HOMS, a displaced Palestinian who tried to get food

ABDEL KAREEM HANA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

On Wednesday, Palestinians in Zawaida stormed a UN World Food Program warehouse and carried off bags of flour.

Amid aid chaos, criticism of Israel mounts

UN denounces new food distribution system, which left dozens of Palestinians injured

By Aaron Boxerman

NEW YORK TIMES

A chaotic start to a heavily criticized food distribution system. Mounting anger from Europe over its threats to dramatically escalate a ground assault in Gaza. And growing pressure from the United States to reach a truce.

Israel is weathering one of its toughest weeks on the diplomatic stage since the start of the war in Gaza, as its allies, including President Trump, appear increasingly fed up with the protracted war, as well as Israel's conduct of it.

On Wednesday, the United Nations denounced the new Israeli-backed aid operation in the southern Gaza Strip, a day after the chaotic launch of the initiative, when thousands of hungry Palestinians rushed a food distribution site, prompting Israeli forces to fire warning shots.

Israel had barred humanitarian aid from entering Gaza for more than two months, causing widespread hunger, before allowing shipments of food, fuel, and other goods to begin flowing in last week. But desperately needed relief — either from the old UN-run system or the new Israeli-designed one — has yet to reach many people in Gaza.

On Wednesday night, large crowds of Palestinians broke into a warehouse belonging to the UN World Food Program, the agency said in a statement. "Initial reports indicate two people died and several were injured in the tragic incident," it said in a statement.

The episodes raised further questions over Israel's latest attempt to overhaul the provision of aid to those in Gaza, in what Israeli leaders call an attempt to sideline Hamas. The UN and many other humanitarian groups have boycotted the initiative, which has also drawn anger from many of Israel's Western backers.

Israel has also been threatening a major ground invasion, which Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has promised will be a decisive blow against Hamas. But the Palestinian armed group has refused to surrender despite well more than a year and a half of devastating bombardment and ground combat, fighting a dogged war of attrition and recruiting thousands of new fighters to its ranks.

Jonathan Whittall, a senior UN humanitarian official, said dozens of people had reportedly been injured in the chaotic fray Tuesday. He called the Israeli attempt to seize control of the humanitarian aid for Palestinians part of "an assault on their hu-

FOOD AID, Page A5

'I feel like I'm not welcome all the time'

MATTHEW CAVANAUGH FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

John Arigbede, president of the graduate student government at UMass Amherst, said he's constantly fielding questions from international peers wondering what to do.

International students wait and worry

By Brooke Hauser, Shelley Murphy, and Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio

GLOBE STAFF

Kathmandu, the capital of Nepal, is approximately 11,923 kilometers away from Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley, according to a signpost on campus that points to cities around the world. Shrestha, a rising senior, feels that distance acutely every day.

It's been a year since she's been home, and she's missed out on so much since she started school — family milestones such as weddings and funerals and visits with her new baby nephew.

With the Trump administration targeting international students, Shrestha said she is scared to leave the United States and visit her family over summer break for fear she won't be allowed back in.

"Being told not to go home, and then also being forced to stay but not knowing exactly where to stay, and also being low-income and first-generation, it's sort of destabilizing,"

STUDENTS, Page A7

Musk leaving administration

His departure, after spearheading efforts to reduce and overhaul the federal bureaucracy, marks the end of a turbulent chapter. A2.

A judge ordered a Harvard Medical School scientist from Russia released from immigration custody. B1.

Tensions are rising around the Red Sox after another walk-off defeat. C1.

Rinse cycles

Thursday: Damp, cooler. High 61-66. Low 55-60.

Friday: Sunny but rain late. High 71-76. Low 55-60.

Sunrise: 5:11 Sunset: 8:12

Weather and Comics, D5-6. Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 149

Suggested retail price
$4.00

