

Khamenei dead as US bombs Iran

President who vowed no wars owns this one

By David E. Sanger
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — With his broad attack on Iran early Saturday and his call to the Iranian people to overthrow their government, President Trump has embarked on the ultimate war of choice.

He was not driven by an immediate threat. There was no race for a bomb. Iran is further from the capability to build a nuclear weapon today than it has been in several years, thanks largely to the success of the president's previous strike on Iranian nuclear enrichment sites, in June.

While Trump claimed Tehran was ultimately aiming to reach to the United States with its array of missiles, even his own Defense Intelligence Agency concluded last year that it would be a decade before Iran could get past the technological and production hurdles to produce a significant arsenal.

And there were no indications of a coming Iranian

ANALYSIS, Page A12

US CENTRAL COMMAND VIA ASSOCIATED PRESS

An image from video provided by US Central Command showed a missile launch from a US Navy ship as part of the attack on Iran on Saturday. Ayatollah Ali Khamenei (right) was killed.

A voice sought

Democrats and a few Republicans escalated demands for Congress to have a say on such attacks. A13.

Local response

In Massachusetts, some have hope for a new Iran and others decry the attack by the US and Israel. B1.

Country's future uncertain; risk to region intensifies

By Jon Gambrell,
Konstantin Toropin,
Josh Boak,
and Aamer Madhani
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Iranian Supreme Leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei was killed in a major attack by Israel and the United States, Iranian state media confirmed early Sunday, throwing the future of the Islamic Republic into doubt and raising the risk of regional instability.

President Trump announced the death hours earlier, saying it gave Iranians their “greatest chance” to “take back” their country.

State media reported that the 86-year-old was killed in an airstrike targeting his compound in downtown Tehran. Satellite photos from Airbus showed that the site was heavily bombed.

His death at his office “showed that he consistently stood among the people and at the forefront of his responsibilities, confronting what officials call global arrogance,” state TV said.

“Khamenei, one of the most evil people in History, is dead,” Trump wrote in a social media post. He warned of “heavy and pinpoint bombing” that he said would continue throughout the week and even beyond, part of a lethal assault the US has justified as necessary to disable the

IRAN, Page A11

At Franklin Park, again a split over land use

Shattuck future fires fears of neighbors

By Chris Serres
GLOBE STAFF

For more than 70 years, the towering walls of the Lemuel Shattuck Hospital in Jamaica Plain have served as a sanctuary for society's most vulnerable, providing care and refuge to low-income patients battling multiple chronic health conditions. It also has been seen as a monument to poor urban planning, a brick-covered eyesore looming over the city's largest public park.

Now, the Healey administration is stirring life into long-dormant plans to redevelop the 13-acre Shattuck Hospital campus adjacent to Franklin Park, treading with care to avoid the fierce community backlash that two years ago derailed ambitions to turn the grounds into a sprawling campus for hundreds of people with mental illness and addiction.

But tensions are already rising. Neighborhood groups are once again mobilizing against any plan to bring supportive housing or addiction treatment to the site, fearing it would cause illicit drug use and crime to spill into a verdant park that has long been the lifeblood of the predomi-

SHATTUCK, Page B10

A family divided by deportation

After her husband is forced to leave, a Massachusetts mother must choose between her sons' life in the US and staying together in Guatemala

Story by Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio,
Globe Staff

Photos by Jessica Rinaldi, Globe Staff

This story was reported over two months in Massachusetts and Guatemala.

It was just the start of the journey, and Christina Toledo couldn't stop thinking about the end.

It had been four months since her husband, Nexan Aroldo Asencio Corado, had been deported by ICE. Now, before sunrise on a December morning, she was rushing through Logan Airport with their twin 4-year-old boys to catch a flight to Guatemala so they could be together for Christmas.

Toledo, desperate to keep their family whole, had started the process to apply for legal residency in Guatemala. This monthlong visit, she knew, would be a test. Could she really live there permanently? Was it really the right place for her American sons to grow up?

“I'm excited, I'm nervous,” said Toledo, 39, keeping an eye on her boys as they waited near the Spirit Airlines counter at Logan. “I'm, like, all emotions right now.”

Across the US, almost 10 million American citizens like Toledo live in households with undocumented people, according to an analysis of data from 2022 by the Center for Migration Studies, a policy group. ICE's swift removal of immigrants from mixed-status families has pushed thousands of Americans into an excruciating dilemma: If they want to keep their family together, they must leave the US.

GUATEMALA, Page A6

Nexan Aroldo Asencio Corado and Christina Toledo said goodbye again outside the doors of the airport in Guatemala City.

A cold choice

Sunday: Some flurries, colder.
High: 33-38. Low: 7-12.

Monday: Sunny and cold.
High: 26-31. Low: 10-15.

Complete report, A22.
Deaths, A16-20.

VOL. 309, NO. 60
*

Suggested retail price
$6.00

Two centuries strong. Focused on the future.

Just as our footprint recently expanded, so does our responsibility to the people and communities we serve. With $31 billion in assets, and expertise across personal, commercial, private banking and wealth management, we're committed to the people and promise of New England.

Get started at EasternBank.com

Eastern Bank
JOIN US FOR GOOD®