'TWO-TIER' POLICE RACE GUIDE ROW

Official report by chief constables tells officers 'racial equity' does NOT mean 'treating everyone the same'

By Martin Beckford
Policy Editor

A NEW two-tier justice row erupted last night as it emerged that police have been told to treat black and white suspects differently.

A report by policing chiefs declared that their commitment to 'racial equity' did not mean 'treating everyone the same or being colour blind'.

Instead, they called for 'equality of policing outcomes' for different ethnic groups by ending the racial disparity in the 'likelihood of people being criminalised'. The 'Anti-Racism Commitment' also stated that officers must now 'consider cultural impact and community trauma when using their powers'.

Shadow Justice Secretary Robert Jenrick said the police chiefs' proposal was 'disgraceful', adding: 'Not only is it deeply unjust, it will also put the British public at risk.'

But a Labour source said last night there was nothing in the plan suggesting police should give 'preferential treatment to black people compared to white people'.

It came after a leaked report revealed that ethnic minority suspects are being given priority for judges considering bail because they may be at a 'disproportionately higher
