More pressure on elite colleges

‘Compact’ targets 9; Brown, Penn had already cut deals

PROVIDENCE — The Trump administration on Wednesday asked Brown, Dartmouth, MIT, and a handful of other top-tier universities to sign a “compact” pledging to uphold President Trump’s political priorities in order to receive priority for federal funding.

The 10-point document, titled the “Compact for Academic Excellence in Higher Education,” would require the colleges to cap enrollment of international students, freeze tuition rates charged to US students for the next five years, limit university employees’ actions and speech related to societal and political events, and commit to Trump’s definitions of gender, among other things, according to a copy obtained by the Globe on Thursday.

“Institutions of higher education are free to develop models and values other than those below, if the institution elects to forego federal benefits,” the compact read.

Besides Brown, Dartmouth, and MIT, the schools that were asked to sign the compact are the University of Pennsylvania, Vanderbilt University, the University of Virginia, the University of Southern California, the University of Texas, and the University of Arizona.

Trump says shutdown is opportunity — for him

Considering another round of federal layoffs

By Tony Romm

NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — President Trump said Thursday that he would meet with his budget chief to determine which “Democrat agencies” he could try to cut, relishing the government shutdown as an “unprecedented opportunity” to achieve his agenda and dismantle federal programs.

Trump did not specify in a post on social media whether he sought to slash spending or lay off federal workers, both of which he has threatened since federal funding lapsed. Rather, the president said his discussion with Russell Vought, the White House budget director, would touch on “whether or not those cuts will be temporary or permanent.”

Shortly after, Karoline Leavitt, the White House press secretary, signaled anew that Trump is eyeing another round of mass federal layoffs. She told reporters that it was “likely” the government could shed workers by the “thousands” if the shutdown continues, adding that the president would further refine the plan.

The comments from Trump and his top aides underscored their desire to take advantage of the governmentwide closure, which began at midnight Wednesday. Rather than try to broker a resolution, the president has focused on leveraging the standoff, aiming to carry out

RED SOX SHUT DOWN, AND OUT

One bad inning was enough to finish off the Sox on Thursday night and send them home for the winter after a 4-0 loss to the Yankees in Game 3 of the wild-card round. Massachusetts native Cam Schlittler was untouchable on the mound for New York, striking out 12 in eight innings and keeping Boston quiet all night. C1.

US warns it won’t tolerate assaults of ICE agents

Confrontations escalating in Mass.

The Justice Department memo was stark and direct: After a shooting at an Immigration and Customs Enforcement facility in Dallas, Attorney General Pamela Bondi on Monday warned that anyone who assaults an immigration officer or tries to interfere with an operation would face arrest and prosecution.

Already in Massachusetts, federal prosecutors have charged four people with assaulting or obstructing immigration agents, and the US attorney in Boston said she is investigating potential charges against nine more.

The arrests, and Bondi’s memo ordering them to be carried out as a matter of policy, come as confrontations between ICE agents and protesters have become more aggressive and at times violent. Though the majority of those charged in Massachusetts were immigrants who were the targets of the ICE operation, prosecutors warned that anyone who interferes with arrests would also be charged. Last year, the US attorney’s office in Massachusetts did not bring a single charge in this area.

“Everyone is on edge,” US Attorney Leah B. Foley said in an interview, pointing to the Sept. 24 shooting at an ICE field office in Dallas by a sniper who killed two detainees and wounded another.

Foley said ICE agents and other federal law enforcement have shown “remarkable restraint when being yelled at, spit at, and called some pretty despicable names by people.”

But she said her office will hold people who break the law accountable.

“We understand that some people’s passions are high and it can be hard to see someone you care about being taken into custody,” Foley said. “But there is going to be a line that when they cross, they are going to be charged. And that is to maintain safety in our communities.”

Fun, sun, football, parties all a big draw

The University of . . . Tennessee? Adam Whitney, a student at Boston Latin School, had never really thought about it. But his college admissions coach suggested it, and the application was free, and even though when he got in, he didn’t really care, a friend home on break from the University of Alabama gave him some scholarly advice that was hard to ignore.

“Yo, you got to go,” his former varsity hockey teammate said, painting a picture of the rollicking social scene at big football schools like Bama or UT. “You will have the best time of your life,” he said.

Y’all!

For much of American history, ambitious Southerners came north for their education. Now, a growing number of students are enthusiastically heading in the other direction.

They’re going for a variety of reasons, including: the warmer weather and people; the football and party vibe; tuition costs that can be lower than at some Northeastern schools; the beautiful campuses; and a break from sometimes intense politicization.

“Some students in the Northeast felt politics was in their face every day,” said Jeff Selingo, the best-selling author of “Dream School: Finding the College That’s Right for You,” and other college-related books.

In some cases, even with schools that are equally good, it’s easier for
