Under Pressure From the Left, Democrats Rejoin the Fight

Divided party hopes shutdown will help reignite voter enthusiasm

Six months ago, Senate Minority Leader Chuck Schumer ignored a push by liberals to stand up to President Trump and shut down the government during a budget showdown. This time, Schumer and the Democratic Party went all in, siding under pressure with the party's ascendant left flank. Leaders say they are determined to show voters a greater willingness to fight on their behalf, in a direct challenge to Trump and the Republicans in control of Congress. Democrats understand their role in the federal government shutdown that began Wednesday might sour rather than rally voters. Party leaders believe it is worth the risk. Last month, congressional Democrats rolled out a strategy of resistance that centered on making the case that expiring health-insurance subsidies, unless renewed, would set off a national crisis. If Republicans weren't willing to negotiate on extending the subsidies, Democratic lawmakers would try to force the issue, taking their chances on a shutdown. Schumer began calling prominent Democratic leaders, including California Gov. Gavin Newsom, former Vice President Kamala Harris and Hillary Clinton, as well as progressive groups, and labor-union leaders to ask them to amplify the party's message, according to people familiar with the calls. Schumer also deputized others in his caucus to persuade influencers that now was time to mobilize liberal voters itching to take on the Republican Party, those people said.

For months, Democrats gave Schumer an earful. At town halls, voters begged party representatives to do more. They complained that the New York Democrat had given up the party's sole leverage in the GOP-controlled government by supplying the Democratic votes needed to keep the government open in March. Schumer faced pressure from the party's progressive wing, including Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez, who is considering a run against him in 2028, according to a person familiar with her thinking. Acceding to demands for action by the party's left-flank followed months of combative

Tesla's Record Sales Surprise After Slide

By BECKY PETERSON

Tesla set a sales record in the third quarter in a surprise reversal of the steep declines that have plagued the electric-vehicle maker this year. Global EV deliveries grew 7.4% in the quarter that ended Tuesday from a year earlier in large part because of U.S. customers who rushed to take advantage of the $7,500 federal EV credit, which expired at the end of the quarter. The sales turnaround, after two quarters of sharp declines, isn't likely to last. Chief Executive Elon Musk has laid out his vision for pivoting the company away from human-driven cars toward autonomous vehicles and robots. Musk has said he sees a more-promising future in more-advanced technologies than competing against Chinese and other global automakers in the EV market where companies like BYD, China's biggest automaker, are driving down the price of vehicles. While Tesla will still sell EVs, Musk has said that new vehicles in its lineup won't have steering wheels or pedals, starting with the two-seater Cybercab, which is scheduled to roll off the assembly line next year. For this bet to pay off, it will take a major shift in

President Explores Bailout of Farmers

President Trump is considering providing $10 billion or more in aid to U.S. farmers as the agriculture sector warns of economic fallout from his far-reaching tariffs, according to people familiar with the discussions. The president and his team are weighing using tariff revenue to fund much of the aid, the people said, adding that distribution of the money could start in the coming months. A senior administration official said the discussions have centered on $10 billion to $14 billion in aid. The aid likely would go toward helping soybean producers, as well as other parts of the farm economy. The official stressed that the deliberations were ongoing and that nothing had been definitively settled. "President Trump and Secretary Rollins are always in touch about the needs of our farmers," said Anna Kelly, a White House spokeswoman, referring to Agriculture Secretary Brooke Rollins. "He has made clear his intention to use tariff revenue to help our agricultural sector, but no fi-

U.S. Turns to Ukraine For Drone Technology

By MICHAEL R. GORDON AND ALISTAIR MACDONALD

A Ukrainian team is in Washington this week to craft a landmark agreement with the Trump administration that would involve Kyiv's sharing its battle-tested drone technology with the U.S. in exchange for royalties or other compensation, according to officials from both countries. The prospective deal, which has the backing of President Trump and President Volodymyr Zelensky of Ukraine, would mark a milestone in the security relationship between Washington and Kyiv. For years, the Ukrainian military has received U.S. weapons. Under the new deal, Ukraine would draw on its experience in producing and using drones to battle the Russian military. A team of Ukrainians, led by the country's Deputy Defense Minister Sergiy Boyev, began talks with Pentagon and State Department officials on Tuesday. An agreement is likely to take months, a U.S. government official said. While the U.S. companies make some sophisticated drones, the Ukrainians are well ahead in mass producing cheap unmanned aerial vehicles, or UAVs, that have proved effective in battle. "It is just a reality that we need Ukrainian drone tech in the U.S.," said William McNulty, a partner at UAI, a U.S. venture-capital fund, which has invested in eight Ukrainian
