

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2025

One job, three generations: Lives of success falter as expenses soar

By Katie Johnston | Globe Staff

ERIN CLARK/GLOBE STAFF

Mary Greenaway and her granddaughter shepherded the small children in their care out of Franklin Park on a sunny afternoon, stopping cars on American Legion Highway to let their procession cross. When they reached her house, Greenaway, who had just turned 67, picked up a 1-year-old in her right arm and pulled his stroller up the steps from the sidewalk with her left.

Greenaway led the five kids, all under the age of 7, to the basement level of her home, where she runs Taurus Family Childcare. There were a tiny table and chairs in the corner, brightly colored posters on the walls, and three cribs ready for nap time behind a curtain.

Greenaway purchased her 4,700-square-foot triple-decker in 1997 on a child care provider's salary. It's everything to her family: a home, a place of business for three generations, and a source of rental income. It's also an investment now worth roughly $1.2 million, more than seven times what Greenaway paid for it.

JOBS, Page A6

Mary Greenaway helped her granddaughter Nova Greenaway, 2, at her Dorchester triple-decker. Greenaway, 67, runs a child-care center from the home she bought in 1997, which has supported three generations of her family.

'The only thing I'm thinking of the future is: What is my Plan B?'

Tse Greenaway, third generation in child care

Trump hints at talks with Maduro

Aircraft carrier joins massive US presence off Venezuela; another boat strike revealed

By Ben Finley and Chris Megerian
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — President Trump said Sunday that the United States “may be having some discussions” with Venezuelan President Nicolás Maduro, a potential diplomatic avenue as it further builds up its military presence near the South American country with the arrival of its most advanced aircraft carrier.

Trump didn't offer details about the possible discussions with Maduro, but he said, “Venezuela would like to talk.”

The development comes as the Trump administration has carried out a series of military strikes against vessels suspected of transporting drugs. The arrival of the USS Gerald R. Ford and other warships, announced by the Navy in a statement, marks a major moment in what the administration insists is a counterdrug operation but has been seen as an escalating pressure tactic against Maduro.

When asked Sunday what he meant when he said Maduro wants to talk, Trump simply said: “What does it mean? You tell me, I don't know.”

“I'll talk to anybody,” he added a few moments later. “We'll see what happens.”

Venezuela's government didn't immediately reply to a request for comment.

The Ford rounds off the largest buildup of US firepower in the region in generations. With its arrival, the “Operation Southern Spear” mission includes nearly a dozen Navy ships and about 12,000 sailors and Marines.

The carrier's arrival came as the military announced

VENEZUELA, Page A5

A case of one-upmanship? Not with these champs.

Rivals-slash-friends work together to rewrite Guinness book

By Billy Baker
GLOBE STAFF

BROOKLINE — As far as human movements go, a pullup is practically a primal dare. Reach for something over your head, such as a bar or a branch, palms out, and then pull yourself up until your chin clears it.

It's a simple movement, yet it is surprisingly difficult, and many people — even those who work out regularly — struggle to do even one.

Then there is the flip side, those for whom a pullup comes naturally. Not easily, for you must earn each one, but every gym has them, that one person who combines talent and effort to achieve the unofficial title of “pullup champion of the gym.” People like Ad-

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF

Adam Sandel (left) and Ron Cooper have set many pullup and other records.

Districts cite ICE for loss of pupils

Some classrooms more empty amid crackdown

By Marcela Rodrigues and Christopher Huffaker
GLOBE STAFF

On his first day of sixth grade, Everton Caetano Sousa sported a brand-new pair of Nike sneakers and smiled for a photo by his mother outside of Stacy Middle School in Milford. Three weeks later, the 11-year-old went home from school to an empty house. His mother was gone.

After wrapping up a shift as a house cleaner, Selma de Sousa Caetano headed to Aldi to pick up garlic for that September evening's dinner. Still in the parking lot, Caetano, who had lived in the United States for 20 years and has no criminal record, was arrested by Immigration and Customs Enforcement, she told the Globe.

Soon after, Caetano was deported to Brazil. Her deportation separated the Caetano family, with her younger son Everton reuniting with her in Brazil a few weeks later, while her older son and husband remained in the United States. Both children are US citizens.

Everton is one of thousands of students this year

ICE, Page A10

Some colleges revamp pitch to students from overseas

Broaden recruiting against White House headwinds

By Diti Kohli
GLOBE STAFF

When a recruiter for the University of Massachusetts Boston set off on an international trip this fall, the itinerary did not include the usual stops in China, India, and Vietnam, countries that generate most of the school's international students. Instead, she wound her way through Greece and the Middle East — Jordan, Kuwait, UAE, Oman, Qatar, Bahrain, and three cities in Saudi Arabia.

The trip marked a strategic shift for the school, which is casting a wider net for international applicants as the traditional pathways of students from abroad are fractured by the White House.

Since taking office, the Trump administration has pressured colleges to enroll fewer international students, restricted travel from 19 countries, and targeted international students involved in campus protests. A pause on visa screenings in May — one that experts say has not been fully lifted

FOREIGN STUDENTS, Page A10

C'mon, rake it up

Monday: Windy, cooler. High 42-47, low 31-36.

Tuesday: More sun. High 46-51, low 32-37.

High tide: 9:05, 9:35.

Sunrise: 6:38. Sunset: 4:20.

Weather and comics, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

Trims in federal funding threaten to curtail Harvard Brain Tissue Research Center's work on Alzheimer's and Parkinson's diseases. B1.

Sophisticated, tag-teaming scammers can trick even savvy utility customers. The Fine Print, D1.

The Federal Aviation Administration is lifting all restrictions on commercial flights as staffing shortages due to the shutdown have largely ended, easing air safety concerns. A2.

President Trump now says the House should vote to release files in the Jeffrey Epstein case, a reversal that came amid a growing divide among Republicans in Congress. A2.

VOL. 308, NO. 140

Suggested retail price $4.00

0 947725 4

PULLUPS, Page B4