

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Shoppers hit the streets in search of Black Friday deals

Sidewalks packed despite chilly temps, inflation worries

By Brian J. Rogal and Rebecca Johnson
Chicago Tribune

Despite chilly temperatures and concerns about inflation, shoppers turned out en masse to take advantage of Black Friday sales in Chicago.

The sidewalks along the Magnificent Mile were packed on a day that, for some, is just as much about finding good deals as it is about holiday tradition. A long line of customers stretched around the Richard J. Daley Center waiting to get into a packed Christkindlmarket, and hundreds of shoppers waited in line to get into the Starbucks Reserve Roastery at 646 N. Michigan Ave., which the company bills as the world's largest Starbucks.

Hundreds more waited for up to an hour inside The Shops at North Bridge, 520 N. Michigan Ave., to get a shot at buying a Jellycat plush toy from a small store tucked inside Nordstrom.

The toys' popularity soared on social media this year, especially among teens, but there are only two brick-and-mortar Jellycat locations in North America, including

Turn to Shoppers, Page 4

Shoppers crowd North Michigan Avenue in Chicago on Black Friday. TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Charlie Wolforth, 5, with his mother, Lindsay Pool, picks out a tree at the tree lot at St. Matthias School in the Lincoln Square neighborhood of Chicago on Friday. E. JASON WAMBSGANS/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

‘When it snows, they feel more Christmasy’

Christmas tree lots in Chicago prepare for snowfall — and customers

By Jeremy Gorner and Tess Kenny
Chicago Tribune

‘Tis the season for the possibility of heavy snow to hit Chicago this weekend — wintry weather that has prompted Christmas tree lots to protect their precious abundance of Frasers, Balsams, White Pines destined for living rooms.

“What do they call it? The calm before the storm?” John Tuttle said on a chilly, sunny Friday morning from a tree lot where he works outside St. Matthias School in Lincoln Square, knowing that he will have to cover up the trees before the day is out.

“We don’t like seeing the snow coming. But, you know, you’ve got to deal with it. It’s Mother Nature,” James Potocnik, of Poor Bob’s Tree Land in the Forest Glen community, said from his lot earlier in the morning. “We would rather have snow than rain. But we’d rather have warm weather.”

Forecasters are anticipating a winter storm to roll through the region starting late Friday. Snow was expected to fall heavily at times — up to an inch per hour, especially during the day Saturday.

With the storm will come a bout of cold, according to Zachary Yak, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service in Chicago.

As the system, which was spinning around the northern Rocky Mountains Friday afternoon, heads east toward

Turn to Trees, Page 2

McHenry County takes on old client: ICE

Case seeks immunity from lawsuits over detained immigrants

By Robert McCoppin
Chicago Tribune

While activists have been fighting arrests by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement on the streets of Chicago, another unlikely party has been facing off against the agency in court.

McHenry County has filed suit against ICE, trying to get the federal government to pay for potential liability for allegedly making immigrant detainees do forced labor.

The court battle pits conservative McHenry County, which once fought in court for the ability to hold accused immigrants in the U.S. without legal permission in its jail, against the agency that once paid it millions of dollars every year to do so. Both county and federal officials have denied liability.

The case comes as the U.S. Supreme Court is considering whether private prisons can immediately appeal their claim of immunity against a rash of similar lawsuits across the nation.

Northwestern University professor Jacqueline Stevens, founding director of the Deportation Research Clinic at the Buffett Institute for Global Affairs, said the Supreme Court seemed skeptical of Geo Group’s claims regarding a prison it runs in Colorado. That might not bode well for a public jail like McHenry County as well.

But McHenry County Assistant State’s Attorney Troy Owens, who manages civil litigation for the county, said the lawsuit against the county should be dismissed.

“This is an absurd lawsuit,” Owens said. “The Trafficking

Turn to ICE, Page 4

BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Bears beat Eagles for 9th win in 10 games

Bears quarterback Caleb Williams celebrates a win over the Eagles on Friday at Lincoln Financial Field in Philadelphia. Chicago Sports

DC shooting deepens president’s stance

Trump ramps up anti-immigrant views with series of threats

By Shawn McCreesh
The New York Times

The shooting of two National Guard members by an Afghan national just blocks from the White House has set off an especially intense level of fury in President Donald Trump and a new push to step up his anti-immigration policies.

In a series of statements in the two days since the shooting on a Washington street corner, Trump has cast the incident as what he has warned about and made clear that he intends to use it to pursue an even more maximalist version of his agenda.

In a social media post near midnight on Thanksgiving, he vowed to “permanently pause migration from all Third World Countries” and threatened to strip U.S. citizenship from naturalized migrants “who undermine domestic tranquility.”

He also threatened to “end all Federal benefits and subsidies to noncitizens of our Country” and deport foreigners deemed to be “non-compatible with Western Civilization.”

Those statements came after he had ordered the administration to review the status of green-card holders from 19 nations that he has

Turn to Shooting, Page 6

TODAY’S WEATHER

High 31 Low 28

Complete Chicagoland forecast on Page 8

$4.00 city and suburbs and elsewhere
178th year No. 333 © Chicago Tribune

