

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

THE WEATHER
Today, sunshine, some clouds, warm, high 86. Tonight, mainly clear, above-normal temperatures, low 68. Tomorrow, sunny, hot, humid, high 92. Weather map, Page B8.

VOL. CLXXV No. 60,905

© 2026 The New York Times Company

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 2026

Prices in Canada may be higher

$4.00

A 91-foot statue of Shivaji, a 17th-century self-made monarch, rises from a seaside fort he built at the southern Indian town of Malvan.

Trump Testing New Grounds For Old Tariffs

By ANA SWANSON

WASHINGTON — Since the Supreme Court struck down President Trump’s global tariffs in February, his administration has been busily working to reconstruct them, exploring legal options that would allow it to build back the tariff wall between the U.S. economy and the rest of the world.

Late Tuesday night, the Trump administration unveiled part of its Plan B: a tariff of 10 percent to 12.5 percent on 59 countries and the 27-member European Union. The levies were intended to pressure governments that the United States says have not enacted or enforced laws against trading goods made with forced labor.

Those tariffs could go into effect as soon as July, and they are unlikely to be the last ones. The administration is working on another slate of tariffs related to countries’ manufacturing practices that will presumably be in addition to the forced labor ones.

The tariffs will be rolled out at a sensitive time for the administration, as voters who are dissatisfied with higher prices from the war with Iran and trade policies prepare to head to the polls. But officials appear intent on patching back together Mr. Trump’s vision for replacing the decades-old global trade order, which he argues has been unfair to American business and left the country with growing trade deficits.

The new tariffs will be imposed under Section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, a law that allows the president to issue tariffs to respond to other countries’ trade practices. Legal experts said they are likely to be more durable than the initial law Mr. Trump used to enact tariffs, the International Emergency Economic Powers Act.

Mr. Trump used Section 301 in his first term to wage a trade war with China, and the tariffs he put in place have survived plenty of court challenges. No administration, however, has ever used the provision in such a sweeping way before.

The experience of watching the administration cycle from one legal explanation to another for its tariffs, only to have those levies struck down by courts, has left some feeling cynical. Over the past year, the Trump administration has shifted through various

Continued on Page A10

Warrior King Reconquers India as a Hindu Hero

By ANUPREETA DAS and SUHASINI RAJ

BODHAN, India — The statue showed up out of nowhere.

On the morning of March 20, 2022, passers-by in the South Indian town of Bodhan were taken aback to find that an almost 10-foot statue of a 17th-century Hindu warrior king had been erected without authorization at a busy intersection.

By the time the police arrived, a few dozen men, both Hindus and Muslims, were pelting stones at each other. The local authorities, worried about a full-blown riot, swiftly imposed a ban on public gatherings.

Critics Say Nationalists Reinterpret Past to Suit Themselves

It didn’t take long to find who was responsible. Gopi Kishan, a member of an extreme Hindu right-wing group, had pulled off the brazen act — involving weeks of planning and a motorcycle convoy — out of frustration. The authorities had informally blessed his petition to erect a statue, Mr. Kishan said, but dithered in giving him the necessary papers, citing the potential for what he called a “law-and-order problem” in a city with a large Muslim population.

But Mr. Kishan said he didn’t intend to incite violence. He simply wanted to give the respect he thought was due to Shivaji, who built an empire from scratch and became legendary for the military cunning with which he fought the Muslim Mughal dynasty that dominated much of present-day India for around 200 years.

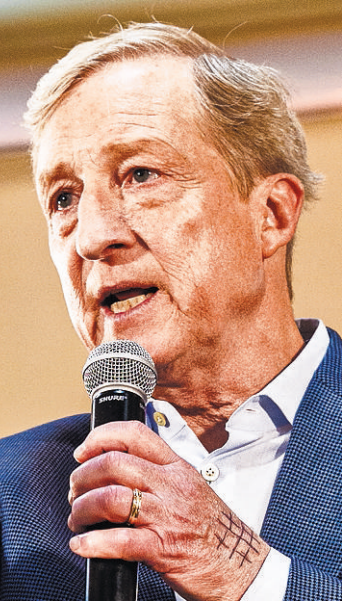

“Had he not fought against the Mughals then, the word Hindu would not have existed today,” Mr. Kishan said.

India is in the throes of Shivaji fever. Across the country, hundreds of statues of the king — usually on horseback, brandishing a sword — have begun studding the

Continued on Page A6

Steve Hilton, left, a Republican, and Xavier Becerra, center, a Democrat, led in early results in the primary for governor, but Tom Steyer, a Democrat, pledged to “wait until every ballot is counted.”

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GABRIELA BHASKAR/THE NEW YORK TIMES

3 Pursue 2 Spots in Tight Race to Lead California

By LAUREL ROSENHALL

LOS ANGELES — Three candidates are locked in a tight race for two spots in the November election for California governor as election officials continue counting millions of ballots cast in the primary.

Results as of Wednesday afternoon showed that Steve Hilton, a Republican and former Fox News host, and Xavier Becerra, a Democrat and former California attorney general, held the top two positions to advance to the November election.

But Tom Steyer, a former hedge fund manager, was in a close third place and told supporters in San Francisco that he was “going to wait until every ballot is counted.”

Tally of Millions of Votes Adds to the Suspense

“We’re going to give democracy time to work,” he added.

In California’s primary, candidates of all parties run on the same ballot and the top two finishers, regardless of party, advance to the November election. It’s the first time since California began using the top-two primary system in 2012 that a governor’s race has been this close, making it possible that two Democrats could advance to compete for the state’s top office.

Many Californians were uncertain about whom to back for governor and waited until the last minute to cast their ballots, which was expected to slow the tally of final results. The initial election results reflect ballots that were cast early in the voting period. Republicans returned ballots at a faster pace than Democrats did, so the early results were expected to favor Republican candidates, including Mr. Hilton.

The election marked the end of

Continued on Page A14

HOUSE APPROVES REINING IN TRUMP OVER WAR IN IRAN

Tehran Hits Kuwait in Drone Attacks

This article is by Vivian Nereim, Leo Sands, Yan Zhuang and Michael Levenson.

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — A civilian was killed and dozens of others were injured at Kuwait’s international airport on Wednesday after Iran fired a barrage of missiles and drones at the country, Kuwait and the United States said. It was one of the biggest Iranian strikes and the first known fatality in a Gulf nation since the ceasefire took effect in April.

The attack inflamed tensions in the region as indirect peace talks between Iran and the United States dragged on with no clear resolution. A spokesman for Iran’s Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps said it had not fired at the airport and blamed the damage on U.S. Patriot missile interceptors that failed to hit Iranian missiles and fell on the building.

U.S. Central Command, which oversees American forces in the Middle East, denied the claim and said Iran had struck the airport with drones in a “deliberate, calculated and unjustified attack.” Kuwait also said the airport had been hit by an Iranian drone.

Video footage verified by The New York Times showed people running from fire and smoke in Terminal 1 of Kuwait International Airport, where a gaping hole had been ripped in the roof. The Kuwaiti authorities said an Indian resident had been killed and at least 63 other people injured, including travelers and airport workers.

Iran’s foreign minister, Abbas Araghchi, mimicking a phrase used by the American military, said that Iran had launched “self-defense strikes” against sites that the United States used as staging grounds for attacks. In recent years, American forces have operated out of a site in the Kuwaiti airport complex, although it was unclear if they were still doing so or if that had been the intended target.

Kuwait’s Ministry of Foreign Affairs said it had told Tehran that it had refused to allow its land or airspace to be used “for any act of aggression against any country.” Incensed by the strike on Wednesday, Kuwait said it had summoned the interim chargé d’affaires of the

Continued on Page A9

4 in G.O.P. Back Vote as Hurdles Remain

By ROBERT JIMISON and MEGAN MINEIRO

WASHINGTON — The House on Wednesday voted to direct President Trump to withdraw U.S. forces from Iran or win approval from Congress to continue the war, after four Republicans sided with Democrats in a striking sign of growing opposition to a military campaign now in its fourth month.

Adoption of the resolution was a remarkable rebuke to Mr. Trump and his handling of the war, after he has repeatedly dismissed any effort by Congress to curb his power and as the G.O.P. has largely ceded its prerogatives to do so, deferring to him time and again. Republicans had abruptly postponed the vote two weeks ago, recognizing that they did not have sufficient votes to defeat the measure and wanting to spare themselves and the president the affront.

But they made no headway over the ensuing days in winning converts, as the conflict has dragged on and Mr. Trump has made little progress toward ending it. And G.O.P. leaders were unable to delay the vote any longer because Democrats had invoked the War Powers Resolution, which requires consideration of such measures within a limited period of time.

The move was also the latest reflection of divisions between Republicans in Congress and the president on a range of issues as their interests diverge in the run-up to the midterm congressional elections. It came after Senate Republicans have in recent days forced Mr. Trump to abandon his request for $1 billion in security funding for his ballroom project and a plan that the Justice Department announced to create a federal fund to pay claimants who accuse the government of having victimized them.

The vote was 215 to 208 to adopt the war powers resolution, sending it to the Senate.

Even if it were to pass both chambers, the ability of lawmakers to force a president to withdraw troops remains a contested legal question, and Mr. Trump and his senior aides have dismissed any effort by Congress to limit his

Continued on Page A8

Justices’ Ruling Lets Alabama End a Majority-Black District

By ABBIE VANSICKLE and EMILY COCHRANE

The Supreme Court on Tuesday night cleared the way for Alabama to eliminate a majority-Black congressional district, a win for Republicans as they fight to hold on to their slim majority in the House.

The ruling served as the first major test since the justices in April weakened the landmark Voting Rights Act of 1965.

The practical effect of the four-page ruling, which was unsigned, is that Alabama can immediately swap out its current map, which has two majority-Black districts, for a map that has only one — giving Republicans a crucial advantage in flipping the seat back into conservative hands.

The court’s three liberal justices joined in dissent.

The conservative justices in the majority wrote that a unanimous three-judge panel that had blocked the map in late May after determining that it was racially discriminatory had “failed to follow our instruction” in light of the court’s recent Voting Rights Act ruling.

In siding with Alabama, the majority found that the lower court had improperly interfered with elected representatives as they organized an imminent election.

“States are free to decide for themselves whether last-minute changes to an election are in their best interests,” the majority wrote.

Justice Sonia Sotomayor, writing on behalf of the court’s liberal bloc, asserted that the court’s decision would lead to “a chaotic election, held under a never-before-used congressional map that intentionally discriminates against Black Alabamians.”

She added she believed that the decision “debases the democratic process” and “corrodes the rule of law by rewarding Alabama’s gamesmanship and outright defiance of court orders.”

With the order, the court’s majority also sent a message for how

Continued on Page A16

BUSINESS B1-5

‘We Had to Part Ways’

The “60 Minutes” correspondent Scott Pelley was fired from CBS for breaking the “foundation” of trust. PAGE B1

Are ‘A.I. Layoffs’ a Cover?

There may be more to job losses in the tech industry besides companies’ reliance on artificial intelligence. PAGE B1

INTERNATIONAL A4-10

Behind Russia’s Escalation

Showing signs of weakness in Ukraine, Moscow hopes strikes will give it a boost in talks. News Analysis. PAGE A5

Wives, or Infiltrators?

A criminal case in Taiwan involving a Chinese-born spouse raises questions about fairness toward migrants. PAGE A4

OBITUARIES B11

Hall of Fame N.B.A. Coach

Rick Adelman’s teams won at least 50 games 11 times, made the playoffs 16 times in 23 seasons, and his Trail Blazers made the league finals twice. He was 79.

SPORTS B6-10

A Star’s Deeply Personal Return

Michelle Wie West is happily retired, but she is playing in the U.S. Women’s Open for herself and her family. PAGE B6

Committed to His Core

Christian McCaffrey, the 49ers’ workhorse running back, prepares his body for battle as he nears 30. PAGE B7

NATIONAL A11-17, 20

Kona Is Facing a Water Crisis

An earthquake destroyed many water catchment systems on Hawaii’s Big Island, another blow to coffee farmers after devastating floods. PAGE A11

THURSDAY STYLES D1-6

Mining an Inherited Trauma

The musician David Baerwald bases his debut novel on the life of his German-Jewish grandfather: an aristocrat, a soldier, a Buddhist and a spy. PAGE D6

OPINION A18-19

Spike Lee PAGE A19

ARTS C1-6

A Good Bit Beyond Tipsy

Rose Byrne, left, and Kelli O’Hara, the Tony-nominated stars of “Fallen Angels,” deliver one of the most hilarious drunk scenes in recent stage history. PAGE C5

