

Israel, Lebanon agree to 10-day ceasefire

Netanyahu says he OK'd deal 'to advance' peace. Hezbollah signals skepticism.

By KAREEM CHEHAYEB, ABBY SEWELL AND ELENA BECATOROS

BEIRUT — Israel agreed Thursday to a 10-day ceasefire in Lebanon, a truce that could pause fighting with the militant group Hezbollah and boost attempts to extend the ceasefire between Iran and the U.S. and Israel after weeks of devastating war.

President Trump announced the agreement as a ceasefire between Israel and Lebanon. Israel has not been fighting with Lebanon itself, however, but rather with the Iran-backed Hezbollah militants inside the country.

Hezbollah said in a statement that any truce must apply "across all Lebanese territory and must not allow the Israeli enemy any freedom of movement."

Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he agreed to the ceasefire "to advance" peace efforts with Lebanon. "We have an opportunity to make a historic peace agreement with Lebanon," he said in a video message.

Israeli forces have engaged in fierce battles with Hezbollah in the border area. Israeli troops have pushed into southern Lebanon to create what officials have called a "security zone," which Netanyahu has said will extend at least five to six miles into Lebanon.

Hezbollah said that "Israeli occupation on our land grants Lebanon and its people the right to resist it, and this matter will be determined based on how developments unfold," a stance that could complicate the ceasefire.

Netanyahu said Israeli troops will stay in an expanded security zone in southern Lebanon "much stronger, more extensive and more continuous than before."

"That is where we are, and we are not leaving," he said.

Trump posted the ceasefire announcement on his social media website, saying it was to begin at 5 p.m. Eastern time. The announcement comes two days after

U.S. adds to its Iran blockade

Military will pursue Iran-linked ships worldwide carrying items on new contraband list. A3

Europe may see flights canceled

Region has "maybe six weeks" of jet fuel supplies left, the International Energy Agency says. A2

ERIC THAYER Los Angeles Times

THE MARINE heat wave started last year. Above, beachgoers in Hermosa Beach.

An alarming ocean heat wave

Warming off the coast of California could disrupt ecosystems and fuel storms and humid weather

By HAYLEY SMITH

An extreme marine heat wave is simmering the Pacific Ocean off the coast of California, and experts are warning that it could affect coastal weather and ecosystems for months.

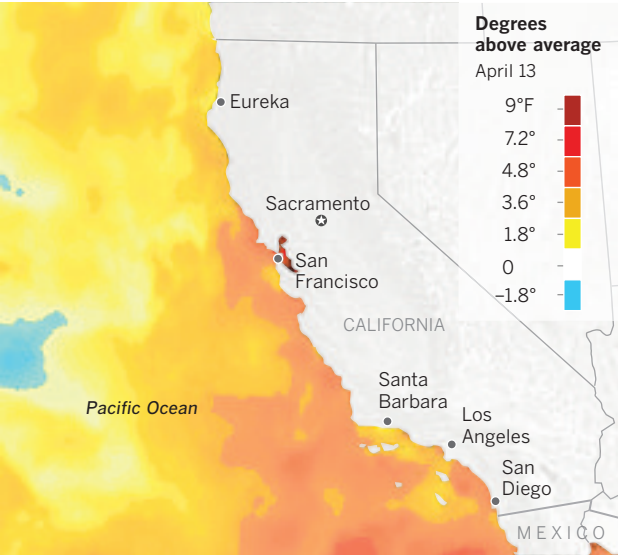

The ocean heat wave started forming at the end of last year but has worsened in recent weeks, according to readings from the Scripps Pier in La Jolla, which has broken more than 25 daily temperature records this year. The surface water temperature on Wednesday was 68.5 degrees — 7.7 degrees above average for the date. The sea bottom was 67.6 degrees, the hottest April 15 in about 100 years of records.

The heat wave is deep, persistent and widespread, spanning from roughly San Francisco to the Mexican border. Those are "pretty significant indicators that this has both staying power

[See Ocean, A8]

Record-breaking marine temps

Sea surface temperatures are warming along the coast of California.

LORENA INIGUEZ ELEBEE Los Angeles Times

BASS' CLIMATE PLAN: More solar power, parks are among goals. CALIFORNIA, B1

Trump lawyer John Eastman disbarred in California

By ANDREW J. CAMPA

The California Supreme Court ordered attorney and former law school dean John Eastman disbarred on Wednesday for his role aiding President Trump's attempt to overturn the 2020 election.

The court ordered Eastman's name be "stricken from the roll of attorneys" and that he pay $5,000 to the State Bar of California.

Eastman's attorney, Randall A. Miller, told the Associated Press that the court's decision "departs from long-standing United States Supreme Court precedent protecting 1st Amendment rights, especially in the attorney discipline context." Miller did not immediately return a call seeking comment from The Times.

George Cardona, State Bar chief trial counsel, said in a statement that the ruling "underscores that Mr. Eastman's misconduct was incompatible with the standards of integrity required of every California attorney."

"Today's California Supreme Court order disbaring John Charles Eastman from the practice of law in California affirms the fundamental principle that attorneys must act with honesty and uphold the rule of law, regardless of the client they represent or the context in which that representation occurs," Cardona said.

The Supreme Court's decision affirms a 2024 ruling from State Bar Judge Yvette Roland that Eastman be prohibited from practicing law.

In a marathon trial that lasted off and on from June to November 2023, the State Bar, which regulates lawyers in California, argued that Eastman was unfit to

[See Eastman, A5]

Power players who supported Swalwell now face questions

One labor leader says she confronted him weeks ago about rumors and he lied.

By DAKOTA SMITH AND NICOLE NIXON

SACRAMENTO — Before it all came crashing down, Eric Swalwell appeared on the cusp of rising to the top of the Democratic field in the California governor's race.

Swalwell had just announced a statewide tour and aired his first ad. The former prosecutor and Dublin city councilman launched his campaign on "Jimmy Kimmel Live!" in November, a comfortable setting for a politician who'd built a national reputation by appearing on cable news shows to attack President Trump.

Influential forces in Sacramento had begun coalescing behind the then-Bay Area congressman, including some consultants and advisors close to Gov. Gavin Newsom. Newsom hasn't endorsed, but his associates' involvement lent credibility to Swalwell.

Swalwell's campaign quickly collapsed with the explosive allegations that he sexually assaulted a former staffer and had acted inappropriately with other women who were just beginning political careers. Swalwell denies the allegations but dropped out of the race for governor and resigned his seat in the House.

The whiplash over Swalwell's rapid rise and fall has Democratic leaders facing questions about whether they had a blind spot about his alleged behavior.

His onetime allies in Congress are being asked whether they knew about his conduct, which has been described as an open secret on Capitol Hill. Unions who backed Swalwell have fled, and political consultants are returning donations.

California Federation of Labor Unions President Lorena Gonzalez, whose group endorsed Swalwell and three others in the race, said she confronted Swalwell more than a month ago after hearing rumors about womanizing and illicit photos.

"He's a liar," Gonzalez said. "He's just a very skillful politician who did not tell the truth even when asked directly."

Though he was little known in much of California, Swalwell, 45, was a youthful and fresh face in a field of candidates, many of them veteran politicians, when he entered the contest.

A little more than a week ago, his campaign was on an upward trajectory. His first statewide ad emphasized his hometown roots and concerns faced by Californians, including rising costs at his favorite doughnut shop in his hometown of Dublin. He rolled out new endorsements from state and federal elected officials almost daily.

[See Swalwell, A5]

Measles cases rise sharply in state amid a nationwide surge

California's tally so far this year is already the highest annual total since 2019.

By RONG-GONG LIN II

California in 2026 has already seen its highest number of annual measles cases in seven years, health officials said, amid an ongoing resurgence of a notoriously infectious disease once considered effectively eliminated in the United States.

The looming new domestic beachhead for the disease comes as vaccination rates have tumbled nationwide in recent years — in some areas falling well below the herd immunity threshold experts say is necessary to keep it from spreading.

"There are pockets of vulnerability, like in communities, that can really lead to outbreaks going wild," said Dr. Peter Chin-Hong, a UC San Francisco infectious diseases expert.

So far this year, there have been at least 40 confirmed measles cases in California. That's well above the 25 recorded in all of 2025, according to Dr. Eric Sergienko, chief of the state Department of Public Health's communicable disease control division. It's also already the state's highest single-year tally since 2019, when there were 73.

The latest measles case was announced Wednesday: an infant from San Francisco who was too young to be vaccinated and picked up the virus during an international trip. It was San Francisco's first measles case since 2019. (The infant's family was all vaccinated.)

The spread of the highly infectious virus is largely occurring among unvaccinated individuals, particularly children and younger adults, state health data show. Of the first 39 measles cases reported this year in California, 95% were among people who were unvaccinated

[See Measles, A6]

Rehab center plan draws protest

San Pedro neighborhood opposes addiction facility

By SANDRA McDONALD

San Pedro residents are fighting plans for a drug rehabilitation center in their neighborhood, in a dispute pitting the concerns of community members against the need for facilities to treat people with drug addiction and mental health challenges.

The nonprofit Fred Brown Recovery Services is seeking to acquire the five-acre property at 2100 Western Ave. and turn it into Serenity Recovery Campus, a 122-bed inpatient recovery facility that would serve "veterans, the justice-involved, the unhoused, and those with co-occurring conditions," the organization said in a two-page information notice sent to area residents. The facility also would serve about 1,000 people on an outpatient basis.

A community forum on the project at the Peck Park Auditorium this week drew roughly 400 people, mostly in opposition.

Los Angeles County Supervisor Janice Hahn, who has lived for more than 20 years in the South Shores neighborhood where the project is planned, said facilities such as Fred Brown are sorely needed to address homelessness and drug abuse. Her comments were met with jeers and heckles.

"I expected to be booed tonight," she said to the crowd.

Los Angeles City Councilmember Tim McOsker, who called the Tuesday night meeting, stood up again and again to urge those attending to show respect to Hahn and repre-

[See Center, A6]

WOLTER PEETERS Fairfax Media

HASTINGS TO EXIT NETFLIX

Officials say company co-founder, 65, will leave the board to focus on philanthropy. BUSINESS, A10

Ex-official in Va. in murder-suicide

Former Lt. Gov. Justin Fairfax killed his wife, then himself, according to police. NATION, A4

Southern noir in the L.A. light

Acclaimed novelist S.A. Cosby is a highlight of this weekend's Festival of Books at USC. ENTERTAINMENT, E1

Weather
Lots of sun.
L.A. Basin: 78/57. B6

