

A reprieve for Planned Parenthood

Judge restores federal funds; uncertainty still cloaks clinics

By Marin Wolf
GLOBE STAFF

Planned Parenthood clinics in Massachusetts can continue to collect reimbursements from Medicaid after a federal judge on Monday temporarily blocked a new law that cuts off payments to clinics offering abortion services.

The decision is a win for the reproductive health provider in its legal battle over cuts to Medicaid, the government health insurance for the poor. The challenge to the cuts, included in President Trump's One Big Beautiful Bill Act, was brought by the national Planned Parenthood Federation, which sought relief for its member clinics across the country, and Planned Parenthood state organizations in Massachusetts and Utah.

Judge Indira Talwani, a US District Court judge in Massachusetts, granted the injunction after determining Planned Parenthood and its affiliates had "demonstrated a substantial likelihood of success" in their claims.

Talwani, appointed by President Obama, found the law likely violated the Constitution by targeting Planned Parenthood as a form of punishment. She also said the law likely violates the health centers' equal protection rights and the right for non-abortion-provid-

PLANNED PARENTHOOD, Page A10

MIT tensions could make it a US target

Antisemitism claims, calls for cutting ties with Israel grow

By Brooke Hauser
GLOBE STAFF

CAMBRIDGE — Massachusetts Institute of Technology president Sally Kornbluth was the last college president standing after fallout from the infamous 2023 congressional hearing cost her peers at Harvard and the University of Pennsylvania their jobs for dodging questions about antisemitism on campus.

Since then, MIT has largely been out of the line of fire in the Trump administration's pressure campaign on elite universities, able to point to firm measures it took when student protests over the Israel-Hamas war breached school policies.

But tensions on campus over the war are simmering again this summer. There were incidents targeting Israeli and Jewish people, as well as new allegations of antisemitism, while calls for cutting research ties with Israel are growing loud-

UNIVERSITIES, Page A7

Gaza tests Trump foreign policy

As president changes course and admits starvation, American role in spotlight

By Luke Broadwater and Michael D. Shear
NEW YORK TIMES

EDINBURGH — President Trump on Monday acknowledged starvation in the Gaza Strip after largely deflecting on the issue, as world leaders and humanitarian organizations warned that more than 20 months of Israeli bombardment and aid restrictions had left nearly 2 million Palestinians in a hunger crisis.

Speaking to reporters in Scotland during a 75-minute question-and-answer session with Prime Minister Keir Starmer of Britain, Trump offered a vague promise to open new food sites in Gaza but said nothing about how the United States would get the aid into the largely demolished enclave.

"We're giving money and things," Trump said, adding that he will tell Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu of Israel to ensure that food gets to people who need it. "I want to make sure they get the food, every ounce of food."

For Trump, who boasts about his transactional approach to deal-making on the world stage, the starvation unfolding in Gaza is a test of whether an America First foreign policy can confront one of the biggest humanitarian catastrophes of the 21st century.

When he landed in Scotland for five days of golf and global diplomacy, Trump's main concerns about Gaza appeared to be that he had not been thanked enough for providing US aid and that other countries should do more to help the starving children there.

"Nobody said, 'Gee, thank you very much,'" Trump complained Sunday. "And it would be nice to

Unrest in Israel

Protest movement against military acts in Gaza gains momentum. A6.

Pressure on Putin

President Trump calls on Russian leader to end attacks in 12 days. A4.

have at least a thank you."

But after a series of meetings with European leaders, including Starmer and Ursula von der Leyen, president of the European Commission, Trump began to echo the desperate language of

TRUMP, Page A6

'We have to help on a humanitarian basis before we do anything. We have to get the kids fed.'

PRESIDENT TRUMP

OMAR AL-QATTAA/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

Palestinians waited at a lentil soup distribution point in Gaza City on Sunday. After months of warnings, experts and doctors said starvation is now sweeping across Gaza amid restrictions on aid imposed by Israel.

Gunman kills 4 in NYC skyscraper

Off-duty police officer among the victims

GLOBE NEWS SERVICES

NEW YORK — A man walked into a midtown Manhattan skyscraper with an AR-15-style rifle Monday evening and began firing, killing a New York City police officer, fatally shooting three other people, and critically wounding a fifth victim before killing himself, officials said.

The slain officer was identified as Didarul Islam, 36. An immigrant from Bangladesh, he was assigned to a Bronx precinct and was working at the building, at 345 Park Avenue, in a private security role, Jessica Tisch, the police commissioner said. He and his wife have two children and were expecting their third, Tisch said.

"He died as he lived. A hero," Tisch said at a news conference.

Coming around the time that workers in the building, between 51st and 52nd Streets, would normally be heading home, the shooting set off a chaotic scene that rippled out into the heart of Manhattan.

Inside the building, which is owned by the Rudin Management real estate firm, tenants that include the N.F.L. and the investment giant Blackstone Group locked down their offices for well over an hour as law enforcement officers searched for the gunman. Shortly before 8 p.m., Tisch said he was dead.

Police identified him as Shane Devon Tamura, 27, of Las Vegas. He had a "documented mental health history," but the motive is still unknown, Tisch said.

SHOOTINGS, Page A7

Four dozen Market Basket employees have been suspended in New Bedford following an audit for immigration documents. D1.

An explosion at a campground killed two Massachusetts women, with officials citing a propane leak as a possible cause. B1.

Tom Lehrer has died. The mathematics whiz/musical satirist was 97. B1.

Patriots star cornerback Christian Gonzalez limped off the field with an apparent leg injury on the first training day with pads. C1.

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

EMBRACING EQUITY — Dr. Gerald Gabeau (right), executive director of the Immigrant Families Services Institute, received congratulations on grant money her group received at Codman Square Health Center. Boston revealed grants targeting public health disparities. B1.

Wave of criticism hits plan to yank some buoys

Coast Guard seeks to modernize; boaters cite safety, history

By Billy Baker
GLOBE STAFF

GLOUCESTER — Let's go over the ways a buoy is not just a buoy, before we get to the way that it is a functional nautical marker.

Walk into a T-shirt shop in New England — anywhere on the coast will do — and you'll see buoys on every product you can slap one on. And deservedly so, for there is an inarguable elegance to the silhouette of a maritime buoy, from the smallest "cans" and "nuns" to the magnificently-trussed bell buoys that have welcomed so many mariners.

Any boater knows the spark that comes from the sight of one in the distance, every time, clicking into a centuries-old system left behind by our ancestors that says: This is the way.

But we no longer need to navigate the way our ancestors did, and so the US Coast Guard says it's time to update it for the present, launching a massive review of nearly each buoy along the New England coast to determine how many can be removed.

"We're several decades into the GPS era," said Matt Stuck, the Coast Guard's chief of waterways management for the Northeast district, who explained that the buoy system has never undergone a wholesale review in the turn-by-turn-world.

In May, the Coast Guard put out a proposal to review 4,700 buoys, which it classifies as "Aids to Navigation," that

BUOY, Page A10

Turn of the century

Tuesday: Possible record heat. High 95-100, low 70-75.

Wednesday: Humid, late storm. High 88-93, low 68-73.

High tide: 2:59, 3:28.

Sunrise: 5:34. Sunset: 8:07.

Weather and comics, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 308, NO. 29

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

