

Returns to northern Gaza set to resume

Hamas hands over list with details on hostages to be freed in first phase

BY MIRIAM BERGER AND ALON ROM

JAFFA, ISRAEL — A day that began with masses of Palestinians blocked from returning to their homes in northern Gaza — the latest snag to threaten the shaky peace between Israel and Hamas — ended with the militant group saying it had turned over a list of Israeli hostages to be released, including information on whether they were alive or dead.

Israeli officials and hostage families have sought such information since the deadly Hamas attack of Oct. 7, 2023. Some of the 251 people who were abducted then have since been freed or their bodies repatriated, but 87 are still believed to be held in the enclave. Hamas said Sunday night that it had given details on all hostages to be released in the first phase of the ceasefire to mediators in ongoing talks in Doha, Qatar; Israel confirmed receiving them. The information was not immediately made public.

Earlier Sunday, thousands of Palestinians were stranded along the enclave's two main north-south highways, unable to move north to communities largely ruined by 15 months of war.

Israel said it wouldn't open up a key corridor or permit more than 1 million displaced Palestinians to return north until Hamas released an Israeli civilian it said was already supposed to be free. Late Sunday, a spokesman for the Qatari Foreign Ministry said the sides had reached an "understanding": Hamas was to release 29-year-old Arbel Yehud and two other hostages before Friday and Israel was to allow Gazans to return to northern areas beginning Monday morning. The Israel Defense Forces issued instructions in Arabic for those who planned to

SEE CEASEFIRE ON A11

DERIK HAMILTON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Tight end Zach Ertz won a Super Bowl with the Eagles seven years ago, but he hasn't been back since. Ertz and the Commanders, whose surprising playoff run ended with a loss in the NFC championship game, know it won't be easy to break through next season.

After falling short, Commanders know they have raised the bar

Barry Svrluga

COLUMN

PHILADELPHIA — An entire stadium belting out "Fly, Eagles, Fly!" might well ring in the Washington Commanders' ears into an offseason that will seem endless. This group advanced to Sunday's NFC championship game by unrelentingly moving on to the next game, the next drive, the next play — regardless of what just happened. It got Washington to within a game of the Super Bowl.

Now, the next game isn't until September. Now, the next snap will be during spring workouts. Now, it all comes with expectations.

This unlikely romp through a transformative season — and then deep into the playoffs — ended with Sunday's thorough 55-23 loss to the Philadelphia Eagles at Lincoln Financial Field, where the green-clad home fans sang deliriously. For them, it served as a stepping stone to the Eagles' third Super Bowl berth in eight seasons.

For the Commanders, the first NFC championship game in 33 years suddenly serves as the floor. The renaissance season — when rookie quarterback Jayden Daniels arrived as a gift, when new general manager Adam Peters remade a roster riddled with holes, when first-year coach Dan Quinn established a locker room vibe that was unshakable — will always be 2024. That trio, and everyone in the team's headquarters, didn't just overhaul what's possible in the future. They overhauled what will be expected.

The pain was real Sunday. Nothing is promised next year or beyond.

"We're not just happy to be here," star wide receiver Terry McLaurin said. "I'm not going to sit here and say it was just a great season. We fell short of our goal."

But in a locker room dominated by the sounds of hands slapping backs, in which grown men embraced and lamented that this exact group will never be together again, there was the unmistakable sense that this ending is also a beginning.

"The sky's the limit, man," veteran offensive lineman Andrew Wylie said. "... The culture that [Quinn] has been preaching since Day 1, the 100 percent

SEE SVRLUGA ON A16

Stunning run ends: Mistakes pile up in the NFC title game, a 55-23 loss to the Eagles. D1

Sally Jenkins: A Commanders season so full of magic goes poof in their lopsided finale. D1

New trade war may be more disruptive than Trump's first

BY DAVID J. LYNCH

President Donald Trump wasted no time last week before lobbing tariff threats at just about every significant U.S. trading partner, in a bracing display of executive power that was reminiscent of his first-term assault on global trade.

But Trump's second trade war is shaping up to be much different from his first. The president's ambitions for a reordering of world commerce are broader. The opposition — at home and abroad — is weaker. And the economic risks he seems prepared to run may be greater.

In the first days of his second term, Trump promised, or threatened, to impose tariffs on more than $2 trillion of foreign products, roughly two-thirds of everything Americans buy from abroad. He ordered his Cabinet deputies to complete a comprehensive analysis of U.S. trade policy by April 1, including deals he negotiated during his first term with China, Canada and Mexico; global

SEE TRADE ON A4

Amid fires, rent in L.A. rose by 20%, well past legal limit

BY RACHEL SIEGEL, ANDREW BA TRAN, FEDERICA COCCO AND CAROLINE O'DONOVAN

Rent spiked by 20 percent in Los Angeles County after wild fires ravaged the area, according to a Washington Post analysis of listings data from RentCast, a property analytics service, raising alarms of price gouging in the midst of a housing crisis.

In nearly 30 areas of Los Angeles County, the median rent for homes listed within two weeks after the fires began increased well past the legal limit of 10 percent, compared with those listed within two weeks before the fires. They include the Encino neighborhood of Los Angeles, where prices rose 130 percent. Rents in Hermosa Beach, a coastal city south of Los Angeles,

SEE LOS ANGELES ON A7

Migrants stuck in Mexico City face rising hostility

Frustration grows as thousands stranded after Trump administration shut down appointment system

LUIS ANTONIO ROJAS FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Maribi Ruiz, 42, a Venezuelan security guard who has been staying at a camp in Mexico City for seven months, helps young women cook. Her CBP One appointment for Feb. 2 has been canceled.

Immigration: Trump administration reportedly issues higher daily arrest quotas for ICE officials. A4

BY MARY BETH SHERIDAN AND VALENTINA MUÑOZ CASTILLO

MEXICO CITY — Tens of thousands of migrants from Venezuela, Guatemala and other countries are stranded in Mexico after the Trump administration shut down the asylum system at the border, increasing the pressure on a nation bracing for a wave of Mexican deportees.

Frustration had already been growing in Mexico over the number of migrants camped out in cities far from the border, trying to secure American asylum appointments through a mobile app run by U.S. Customs and Border Protection. In Mexico City, some migrants have built tent cities and slept on the streets. In a country long sympathetic to migrants, neighbors started protesting.

Now, those migrants have no clear path to the United States.

"Everyone is in limbo, desperate, trying to figure out what to do," said the Rev. Juan Luis Carbajal, who runs the Archangel Raphael migrant shelter in southern Mexico City.

The Mexican government has no data on how many foreigners have been waiting within its

SEE MIGRANTS ON A12

IN THE NEWS

Cancer fight A Colorado woman faced a long battle full of twists and clinical trials, trying to stave off the disease as it spread from her eyes to the rest of her body. A8

Tick-tock for TikTok Inside 36 hours of frenzy as the popular app's developers tried to stall a nationwide ban. A13

THE NATION Alternative medicine advocates see promise in Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s ascent. A3
The suspects in the killing of a Border Patrol agent had been under surveillance. A5

A former lab scientist accused of altering DNA evidence faces felony charges in Colorado. A5

THE WORLD Belarusians headed to the polls in an election labeled a "sham." A10

At least 22 were killed in Lebanon as the deadline for withdrawal of Israeli forces passed. A11

THE REGION A new program is distributing robotic pets in an attempt to ease an epidemic of loneliness and isolation among older residents. B1

The D.C. crime lab is allowed to again test latent fingerprints, moving one step closer to the full accreditation it lost in 2021. B1
A missing persons case in the District ended with a horrifying discovery behind the drywall in a Maryland man's home. B1

STYLE Pandas are our laziest celebrities. And as they return to the National Zoo, they're so cute that we just can't get enough of them. C1
A new film calls into question who shot a famous photo from the Vietnam War, leading to controversy. C1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A13
COMICS.....C5
OBITUARIES.....B4
OPINION PAGES.....A14
TELEVISION.....C4
WORLD NEWS.....A10

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54109

