

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, JANUARY 27, 2025

Healey a well-traveled political proxy in '24

Governor defends out-of-state stumping; GOP questions commitment to priorities

By Matt Stout
and Samantha J. Gross
GLOBE STAFF

Governor Maura Healey spent on average one in every three days outside of Massachusetts in the months leading up to Election Day, a stretch in which she raised money in California, repeatedly stumped for Democrats in New Hampshire, and helped barnstorm Pennsylvania and Michigan for Vice President Kamala Harris, a Globe review found. All told, Massachusetts' top elected official spent all or parts of at least 76 days out of state during 2024 — the equivalent of 2½ months — far exceeding her total from the year before, according to the Globe analysis. An active political surrogate, Healey defended her trips through a spokesperson, who said that the first-term Democrat “is on 24/7 for the people of Massachusetts” and that she campaigned for liked-minded candidates with policies that would benefit the state. Republican legislative leaders, however, questioned whether Healey was prioritizing politics over the work back home ahead of her own potential reelection run in 2026. Healey's travel in 2024 included a stretch in which she visited or was traveling to other states on 28 of the 80 days from the day she left Massachusetts for days Healey was out of state or traveling in 2023.

50

50%
jump in out-of-state travel in 2024.

HEALEY, Page A4

Colombia yields to Trump on deportees

Feud over military flights led to threats of steep tariffs, visa restrictions

By Regina Garcia Cano, Zeke Miller, and Astrid Suárez
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOGOTÁ — The White House claimed victory in a showdown with Colombia over accepting flights of deported migrants from the United States on Sunday, hours after President Trump threatened steep tariffs on imports and other sanctions on the longtime US ally in Latin America. Close partners in anti-narcotics efforts, the United States and Colombia clashed Sunday over the deportation of migrants and imposed tariffs on each other's goods in a show of what other countries could face if they intervene in the Trump administration's crackdown on illegal immigration. The White House held up the episode as a warning to other nations who might seek to impede his plans. Press secretary Karoline Leavitt said in a late Sunday statement that the “Government of Colombia has agreed to all of President Trump's terms, including the unrestricted acceptance of all illegal aliens from Colombia returned from the United States, including on U.S. military aircraft, without limitation or delay.” Leavitt said the tariff orders will be “held in reserve, and not signed.” But Leavitt said Trump

IMMIGRANTS, Page A7

PHOTOS BY CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

With her math lesson in the background, Eday Garcia Vázquez, 10, ate breakfast at her home before going to the Dever School.

AT BEST, STATE GETS GRADE OF ‘INCOMPLETE’

Boston's Dever School, slated to close, is latest example of limits of receivership

The state took over the Paul A. Dever Elementary School in Dorchester over a decade ago. The city plans to close it next year.

By James Vaznis
GLOBE STAFF

More than a decade ago, the state took over Dever Elementary School in Boston with grand promises of improving a school with chronically low test scores. The idea was to, within a relatively short period, get student performance moving in the right direction and then return control to Boston Public Schools. The turnaround proved to be more difficult than anticipated. The state's effort got off to a rocky start with high turnover among principals and teachers, and MCAS scores went through periods of improvement and declines, keeping Dever firmly under state control. Now, the Dever school faces an altogether different resolution: closure. As part of Superintendent Mary Skipper and Mayor Michelle Wu's plan to consolidate school facilities, the Dever would be closed in June 2026. The recommendation is raising fresh questions about the state's oversight of Dever and more broadly the future of school receiverships.

DEVER SCHOOL, Page A10

Order to end DEI programs roils employers

Enforcement unclear but intimidation pronounced

By Katie Johnston and Shirley Leung
GLOBE STAFF

Just days into his new administration, President Trump brought his war on diversity, equity, and inclusion to the C-suite, making business leaders in Boston and beyond wonder if they need to comply with orders aimed at eliminating DEI practices in the private sector, or press on. Some of Trump's directives may be difficult to carry out and will surely face legal challenges. But lawyers and consultants note they could pressure businesses to scale back DEI initiatives voluntarily to avoid being targeted, as several major corporations including Meta, Walmart, and Target have done since Trump was elected. Also, some may privately embrace doing away with diversity initiatives. “The intent of this order is not actually as specific as changing how people get hired,” said Davey Shlasko, founder of Think Again Training & Consulting in Boston. “The intent is to throw people into panic and scare people out of trying to do things in fair ways.” The striking directive from Trump to eliminate

DEI, Page A7

A gusty call

Monday: Mostly sunny, windy.
High 36-41, low 31-66.
Tuesday: Snow showers, windy.
High 35-40, low 17-22.
Sunrise: 7:02. Sunset: 4:52.
Weather and comics, D4-5.
Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 27

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The cease-fires in Lebanon and the Gaza Strip appeared increasingly fragile after Israeli forces killed scores of people in southern Lebanon and prevented some Palestinians from moving back to their homes in Gaza. A3.

The Chiefs will face the Eagles in Super Bowl LIX in two weeks, as Kansas City topped Buffalo 32-29 and Philadelphia defeated Washington 55-23 on Sunday. C1.

Governor Maura Healey's administration is threatening to withhold funding for firefighter safety equipment from those communities that reject participation in the state's bid to expand housing. D1.

The shooting death of a border officer stuns residents of northern Vermont. B1.

Panning for gold (with pepperoni on top)

In roundabout way, Brockton firm finds self in center of bar pizza craze

By Billy Baker
GLOBE STAFF

BROCKTON — There's a guy from Charlestown on the phone, and he's putting Bobby Owens through the usual interrogation, namely: Are these pizza pans the real thing? Are these what they use at all the classic bar pizza places on the South Shore? “Yes, we supply like 99 percent of them,” Owens tells the customer, who is interested in ordering four of the 10-inch steel pans that have made Owens an unlikely star. The caller rattles off a few of the iconic bar pizza places — Lynwood Café in Randolph, Town Spa in Stoughton, Poopsie's in Pembroke — and Owens gives him a yep, yep, and yep. “And you're the third generation of your family to sell them?” the caller asks on speakerphone. “Fourth,” Bobby corrects him, and gives a smile to the third generation, his father “Big Bob” Owens, who is sitting a few feet away at a cluttered desk in the corner of Bay State Restaurant Products, doing bookkeeping by hand. What the caller is feeling out is authenticity, for part of the ap

PIZZA, Page A10

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF

Bobby Owens at Bay State Restaurant Products held the company's in-demand pizza pans.