

Hate crime charges leveled in Colo.

Details of attack on supporters of Israeli hostages hint at suspect's motive, planning

By Mark Walker,
Michael Levenson,
and Thomas Fuller
NEW YORK TIMES

BOULDER, Colo. — The man accused of an attack against demonstrators who were seeking to bring attention to Israeli hostages in the Gaza Strip had been planning the attack for a year and told investigators he wanted to “kill all Zionist people,” federal prosecutors said Monday.

The man, Mohamed Sabry Soliman, was federally charged Monday with a hate crime in the Sunday afternoon attack in Boulder. Also, the district attorney's office there announced multiple state charges of attempted murder, assault, and possession of incendiary devices.

Authorities said that Soliman, a man from Egypt whose American tourist visa had expired, ignited two Molotov cocktails — glass bottles filled with flammable liquid — and threw them toward the demonstrators on Sunday afternoon. Eight people were wounded, two of them seriously.

CHET STRANGE/GETTY IMAGES

Supporters of the victims built a tribute in Boulder, Colo.

The wounded, four men and four women ranging in age from 52 to 88, were participating in a weekly event called Run for Their Lives, which is held in cities around the world and is designed to call attention to the hostages taken by Hamas militants in the Oct. 7, 2023, attack on Israel that ignited a war.

Authorities said the suspect had posed as a gardener to get close to the demonstrators.

But he had second thoughts and only threw two out of the 18 incendiary devices he had into the group of about 20 people, yelling “Free Pal-

ATTACK, Page A10

Official's plea links Harvard cuts, national security threat

Court filing cites director warning of possible ‘grave and immediate harm’

By Mike Damiano

GLOBE STAFF

A Defense Department official pleaded with her superiors not to cancel a Harvard University grant focused on biological threats because doing so could pose “grave and immediate harm to national security.”

The official, a director at the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, known as DARPA, said a Harvard research team funded by the grant had reached a “pivotal juncture” in a project on the “biological threat landscape.”

Those revelations emerged in court filings Monday in Harvard's lawsuit over the Trump administration's nearly $3 billion in funding cuts. The sweeping cuts, which Harvard argues are illegal, have defunded medical research on cancer and tuberculosis, for example, and shuttered research programs for NASA. As part of the litigation, Harvard has obtained extensive government records showing the funding terminations were haphazard and “arbitrary,” according to the university's lawyers.

In one round of funding cuts last month, the Department of Defense terminated grants and contracts with Harvard researchers working on military projects.

A day after the Pentagon informed Harvard of those cuts on May 12, Department of Defense leaders announced the decision to military offi-

HARVARD, Page A6

From China to Mass., with deep pockets

Students bring economic power, along with dreams

By Brooke Hauser and Diti Kohli

GLOBE STAFF

Min Ye, a professor of international relations at Boston University, finds herself thinking of a line from a famous Chinese poem: “Where the heart is at peace, there is my home.”

A former international student from Wenzhou, China, she now feels at home in Boston and mostly welcome in the United States, where she has lived for more than 20 years.

But on Wednesday, the US effectively pulled the welcome mat out from under the Chinese international students here, some 277,000 by most recent count. Secretary of State Marco Rubio announced the federal government would “aggressively” revoke visas of Chinese students, “including those with connections to the Chinese Communist Party or studying in critical fields.”

Although specifics of the new policy are still unclear, Ye sees Rubio's “rejection” of Chinese students as “a strong signal that we want to go back to the '70s,” she said, before “the whole global collaboration in science, technology, and education.”

“The dominant narrative seems to be that the US possesses abundant resources and cutting-edge technologies, and that international students come to ‘steal’ them for their home countries,” she ob-

STUDENTS, Page A6

‘He’s a golden boy. Wherever he goes, he blesses people.’

DAIANE PEREIRA, on her teenage son detained by ICE

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Marcelo Gomes da Silva's mother stood in her son's bedroom in Milford Monday. The snapshots on the wall included one of Gomes and his girlfriend (bottom). Gomes, 18, was detained by ICE on his way to volleyball practice.

A mother waits in anguish

Detained Milford teen caught in ‘collateral arrest,’ ICE officials say

By Marcela Rodrigues
and Dan Glaun

GLOBE STAFF

MILFORD — The repeated, urgent knocks on the family's door came shortly after 8 a.m. Saturday.

A cousin, between shallow breaths, delivered the news to Daiane Pereira and João Paulo Gomes Pereira: “Marcelo was taken by ICE. They took him.”

Between tears, Daiane Pereira on Monday recounted to the Globe in an exclusive interview, how her family learned of the detainment of her son, 18-year-old Marcelo Gomes da Silva, who authorities later said was swept up in a “collateral arrest” target-

Immigration information

US officials offered details of 1,461 arrests they've made in state in last month. B1.

ing his father.

Federal agents approached the family's vehicle, with Gomes in the driver's seat, in the driveway of a classmate, to whom he was providing a ride to Milford High School for volleyball practice. They asked where he was born, she said.

The Brazilian native was then taken into custody, a scenario the family didn't think would happen because the teen has no criminal history, she said.

MILFORD, Page A7

Rays in a ruckus with a war on sunscreen

Online ‘experts’ getting under skin of dermatologists

By Beth Teitell
GLOBE STAFF

Just in time for summer, the war on sunscreen has arrived. “Who else has stopped using SunScreen?” @BGatesIsaPyscho asked in mid-May. And on X, more than 4,000 people couldn't wait to respond.

“I personally feel putting sun screen on your kids should be child abuse,” one UV truther wrote.

“They told us the sun was the threat,” another said. “Not the corporations funding both the warning and the cure. I stopped burning when I stopped believing them.”

“People burn because of the seed oils in these processed foods,” read a third reply. “If you eat clean, you'll be fine.”

Wait — what? Wasn't it just yesterday that we were supposed to feel guilty for not using sunscreen? Yes, but forget all that nonsense from your dermatologist. Now it's burn, baby, burn.

Make America Blister Again!

SUNSCREEN, Page A7

GBH is laying off 6 percent of its staff in the latest round of cutbacks amid financial challenges that include loss of some federal grants. D1.

The Supreme Court declined to take up a pair of gun-rights cases, leaving in place Maryland's ban on semiautomatic military-style rifles and Rhode Island's restrictions on large-capacity magazines. A2.

The latest meeting of Russian and Ukrainian negotiators produced little beyond an agreement to exchange prisoners and the bodies of fallen soldiers. A3.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:
BostonGlobe.com

DAY OF REFLECTING AND RETIRING

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

David Andrews struggled to keep his emotions in check in a news conference announcing his retirement after a 10-year NFL career, all spent with the Patriots. He was the team's last offensive starter from its 2019 Super Bowl title. C1.

A solful experience

Tuesday: Lots of sun. High 71-76, low 57-62.
Wednesday: Sunny, hotter. High 80-85, low 62-67.
Sunrise: 5:49. Sunset: 6:29.
Weather and comics, D5-6.
Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 154

Suggested retail price
$4.00

