

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, JULY 20, 2026

At Clancy trial, insanity defense the focus

The facts of the case are not disputed: A mother strangled her three children. Her fate, however, remains uncertain.

By Shelley Murphy
GLOBE STAFF

On a January night in 2023, Lindsay Clancy strangled all three of her children in the basement of her Duxbury home, slashed her neck and wrists, and jumped out a second-story window in an unsuccessful attempt to kill herself.

That is not in dispute. The former labor and delivery nurse admits she killed 5-year-old Cora, 3-year-old Dawson, and 8-month-old Callan.

But she has pleaded not guilty to three first-degree murder charges, saying she was in the throes of severe postpartum mental illness.

When her trial is set to begin, on Monday, her lawyer will try to persuade a jury to acquit her of those charges due to “lack of criminal responsibility,” arguing that she was unable to resist a voice in her head telling her to kill her children and herself.

Jury selection is slated to take place in superior court in Plymouth in a trial that is expected to last six to eight weeks and feature dueling mental health experts, graphic evidence, and emotional testimony from Clancy’s then-husband, Patrick, who discovered their childrens’ lifeless bodies.

Jury selection starts Monday for Lindsay Clancy.

Judge William F. Sullivan plans to seat 18 jurors, including six alternates. The prosecution lists 168 potential witnesses in a court filing, while the defense lists 53.

If convicted of first-degree murder, Clancy, now 35, will face a mandatory sentence of life in prison without parole.

CLANCY, Page A7

Senate race has liberals lamenting

Young candidates generate energy in other regions while Mass. lags, they say

By Anjali Huynh
GLOBE STAFF

The young, progressive movement is surging in some of the country’s bluest corners, with candidates racking up Democratic primary wins from New York to Colorado.

But here in Massachusetts’ marquee US Senate race, that energy on the left is far more muted.

From the state party convention floor to online forums, some Democratic voters — both young and older — have for months lamented that the Senate primary between incumbent Senator Ed Markey and Representative Seth Moulton has left them in a Goldilocks conundrum. One candidate is a recognized progressive, but at 80, older than they want in their next senator; the other is younger, but too moderate for their taste.

Those Massachusetts primary voters are looking longingly at other races with young, insurgent options, asking: Where’s the one that’s just right here?

“Seth’s age does not make him a good progressive, and with Ed Markey, I have concerns about his age after we’ve just seen Senator [Lindsey] Graham pass away,” said Nicholas Golden, 32, a Wilmington School Committee member. Golden plans

SENATE, Page A6

Cheating by students; alleged indifference by Ivy university

AI case dismays professor, at both ends of academia

By Brooke Hauser
GLOBE STAFF

To cheat or not to cheat? That is the question facing many students in the age of artificial intelligence. For universities, the question is what to do about it.

The Ivy League is no exception: Earlier this month, Brown University launched an investigation after Roberto Serrano, a longtime economics professor, alleged that some students in his ECON 1170 class used AI to cheat on their take-home midterm exams.

But Serrano claims the university only acted after he aired his story, which went viral after being published by the Spanish-language news site El País in late June. He felt Brown should have leapt to defend its academic integrity.

“It’s absolutely clear to me,” he told the Globe, “that if I hadn’t gone public, nothing would have

CHEAT, Page A10

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Flowers encircled a blood stain where Johan Sebastián Durán Guerrero, a Colombian native, was killed, in Biddeford, Maine.

IN A SHAKEN BIDDEFORD, GRIEF SPIKED WITH FURY

Residents, politicians demand answers for the blood shed by ICE

By Brian MacQuarrie and
Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio
GLOBE STAFF

BIDDEFORD, Maine — Bloodstains darkened the pavement where an ICE agent shot and killed a young father from Colombia last Monday, a startling act of violence that has left a raw, indelible mark on this small former mill town, residents say.

Friends are hugging spontaneously on the street. Children ask their parents what happened — and why. Residents and civic leaders are demanding answers. And a stunned community in southern Maine is reacting to the death of Johan Sebastián Durán Guerrero — a 25-year-old immigrant building a life with his partner and young daughter — with grief and defiance.

“It just is deeply maddening and depressing,” said Mayor Liam LaFountain, a lifelong Biddeford resident.

Outrage and empathy are palpable here, as residents want to know why Durán Guerrero was shot while driving near his apartment. Senator Angus King of Maine was told by Markwayne Mullin, the US Homeland Security secretary, that Durán Guerrero had not been the intended target of an arrest warrant and deportation order, according to King’s office.

King, an independent, said Mullin initially told him that Durán Guerrero

BIDDEFORD, Page A10

Less oversight

Federal agents reportedly were told the FBI would no longer investigate confrontations with immigration officers. A2.

A (mostly) Cup-worthy performance for the T

The prognosticators of doom were found to be off the rails

By Diti Kohli
GLOBE STAFF

There is a TikTok that MBTA general manager Phil Eng loves. A World Cup fan films himself leaving the France-Morocco match at Foxborough’s “Boston Stadium” at 6 p.m., boarding a South Station-bound commuter rail train 13 minutes later, and arriving downtown a minute before 7 p.m. He’s “shocked,” he says in the post, to be at Logan International Airport and through security (with time left to change his clothes) well before an 8:30 p.m. flight.

It is a shining example of how the T exceeded expectations — at least to many locally — during the seven World Cup matches Boston hosted, testing the region’s aging and oft-unreliable transit system.

For months, questions swirled around the T’s decision to sell marked-up, $80 round-trip Foxborough tickets. Preparations were long dwarfed by a standoff between state and city of Boston officials over closing a busy street near South Station. Some Redditors predicted Boston would be a “laughingstock.”

WORLD CUP, Page A7

THE REIGN OF SPAIN

DAVID RAMOS/GETTY IMAGES

It took 106 minutes and about 20 shots before Spain finally broke through, with Ferran Torres, a second-half substitute, scoring the decisive goal and giving his country its second World Cup, with a 1-0 win over defending champions Argentina. C1.

Rey for a day

Monday: Sunny.
High 80-85, low 63-68.

Tuesday: Stormy late.
High 67-72.

Sunrise: 5:25. Sunset: 8:16.

Weather and comics, D4-5.

Obituaries, C9.

The Red Sox have now won a lucky 13 games in a row, finishing its weekend sweep of the Rays with a 6-1 victory. C1.

VOL. 310, NO. 20

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

29111

0 947725 4