

“All the News
That’s Fit to Print”

The New York Times

VOL. CLXXV No. 60,951

© 2026 The New York Times Company

MONDAY, JULY 20, 2026

Prices in Canada may be higher

$4.00

HIROKO MASUIKE/THE NEW YORK TIMES

The Reign Is Spain’s
Ferran Torres scoring the winner in extra time against Argentina in the men’s World Cup final on Sunday. Coverage at nytimes.com.

Trump’s Gutting of Agency Stifled the Scrutiny of Workplace Bias

By CORAL DAVENPORT
NORFOLK, Va. — Federal investigators were working in early 2025 to wrap up a two-year inquiry into claims of pervasive sexual harassment and discrimination at a company that makes weapons, vehicles and cybersecurity tools for the Pentagon.
The investigators had found, among other things, that some male managers at a Norfolk, Va., Navy shipyard had demanded oral sex and other sexual contact from female employees in exchange for promotions and overtime pay, and that Black women had been paid less and promoted less frequently than men, according to three people with knowledge of the findings.

The government was zeroing in on a resolution to propose to the company, BAE Systems: to make seven-figure payouts to workers and to adopt reforms — or risk losing its roughly $8 billion in annual federal contracts.
Then, the inquiry was suddenly halted.
On Jan. 21, the day after President Trump was inaugurated, he directed the Labor Department

Civil Rights Office Had Reviewed Contractors for Government

office conducting the investigation to stop most of its work, effectively shutting down the inquiry. It was part of a sweeping executive order purging the federal government of diversity, equity and inclusion initiatives that Mr. Trump said had undermined individual achievement in favor of a “pernicious identity-based spoils system.” The investigators were stunned.

“I wasn’t even allowed to contact the workers,” said Sam Maidens, who led the investigation of BAE and retired from the government last year. “We were so angry that they wouldn’t get the remedy that should have come to them.”
BAE never received the investigation’s findings or the proposed settlement, according to a company spokesman, Tim Paynter, who said an internal investigation did not substantiate employee

Continued on Page A13

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ADRIANA LOUREIRO FERNANDEZ FOR THE NEW YORK TIMES

Liliana Figueroa, left, who lives in Brazil, lost her 16-year-old daughter in La Guaira, Venezuela. Rafael Alberto Gómez Muñoz, center, who returned from Colombia, lost his 39-year-old sister. Jhon Jairo Portal Pino, who works in Peru, lost his 19-year-old daughter.

Heartbreak of Quakes Is Doubled for Venezuela’s Many Migrants

By EMMA BUBOLA
LA GUAIRA, Venezuela — Her WhatsApp video to her mother was quick and casual: a clip showing her dinner plate with pasta and chicken, her face and a thumbs-up sign. It was an anodyne update between a mother who had migrated to Brazil and her 16-year-old daughter in Venezuela — part of a daily deluge of voice notes, photos of manicures and selfies of braced-teeth smiles, stickers and summer holiday plans.
But after the video, sent at 5:30 p.m. on June 24, the girl, Angelina, stopped texting.
At midnight, after her mother, Liliana Figueroa, heard that earthquakes had hit her daughter’s town, she texted again. “Mommy’s baby,” she wrote to Angelina at 12:37 a.m. “Where are you, my beautiful daughter?”
“Honey,” she wrote at 12:38 a.m. “Honey,” again, at 1:18 a.m. “Honey,” again, at 4:27 a.m.
All her messages went undelivered. The body of Angelina, a bubbly, extroverted girl, was found in the rubble of a residential tower in La Guaira.

Hurrying Home, Only to Bury Loved Ones

When the news reached Ms. Figueroa, she was thousands of miles away. Like nearly eight million Venezuelans, she had left a broken economy to build a livelihood abroad and support her daughter.
Mass migration defines modern

Venezuela — and it heavily marked this disaster, too.
The earthquakes, which have killed more than 5,200 people, ravaged the northern Venezuelan coastal state of La Guaira, a place where virtually every family has a member abroad.
Migration saved many Venezuelans, who survived simply because they were living abroad. But it also made their grief harder.
Some, like Ms. Figueroa, made long, grueling trips home, turning a much-awaited homecoming — a

Continued on Page A8

American Dies As Iran Drone Is Neutralized

Blast in Iraq Adds to Toll of Intensifying War

This article is by Aaron Boxerman, Yan Zhuang, Hari Raj and Eric Schmitt.

The Pentagon said on Sunday that a third member of the American military had died during a weekend of back-and-forth attacks, as the war with Iran escalated and the United States began sending more warplanes to the region.
The death of the soldier, who was killed in northern Iraq during the disposal of a downed Iranian attack drone, came amid a cycle of attacks that has all but shredded the cease-fire reached last month. There was no sign of diplomacy between the two sides, and American officials who spoke on the condition of anonymity said that the United States was sending more military jets to the Middle East — a move that was in the works even before the recent deaths.
The service member killed in Iraq on Saturday was not a bomb technician but a soldier who was hit by debris or fragments when the drone was detonated, according to a U.S. official who spoke on condition of anonymity. The incident is under investigation, according to the official, who was not authorized to discuss operational matters publicly.

Another U.S. service member was wounded in the incident and was receiving treatment for a minor injury, the military said in a statement.
The fatalities raised the number of U.S. military personnel killed in the war to 17.
The latest confirmed U.S. death happened on Saturday, a day after two soldiers were killed in an Iranian missile barrage in Jordan. That strike, which left another soldier missing, was the first deadly attack on U.S. personnel since the cease-fire. A U.S. official who spoke on the condition of anonymity said on Sunday that remains recovered at the scene were believed to be those of the missing soldier.

The deaths came during a week of spiraling attacks by both sides that hit sensitive infrastructure, such as bridges and water facilities. Such facilities that civilians rely on to survive are generally not considered legitimate military targets, and striking them could be considered a war crime.
The U.S. military said early on Sunday that it had attacked Iranian military coastal surveillance

Continued on Page A10

THE WEATHER
Today, sunny, winds light and variable, high 80. Tonight, cloudy, low 71. Tomorrow, cloudy, showers and a thunderstorm mainly late in the day, high 78. Weather map is on Page B7.

AGENTS ARE TOLD F.B.I. WON’T LOOK INTO ICE CLASHES

OFFICIALS DENY A SHIFT

Scrutiny May Be Limited as Criticism Mounts After Shootings

By DEVLIN BARRETT and HAMED ALEAZIZ

WASHINGTON — Federal agents around the country were told in recent days that the F.B.I. would no longer investigate confrontations with immigration agents — cases that sometimes yield evidence that could be used to prosecute Department of Homeland Security agents implicated in violent encounters, according to people briefed on the decision.

If enacted, such a change would sharply limit law enforcement scrutiny of immigration agents, as the Trump administration draws mounting criticism over killings at the hands of federal officers. In the last two weeks, two fatal shootings by Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents in Texas and Maine have thrust the government’s tactics back into the spotlight.

F.B.I. managers around the country received a written notice informing them of the change on Thursday, according to the people familiar with the matter who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe internal communications. The same day, some ICE agents around the country were notified by their F.B.I. counterparts.

The guidance shared with them said that the bureau would stop investigating claims of assaults against Department of Homeland Security agents, the people said. Even though such investigations are intended to determine whether the officers were in fact attacked, they can provide a crucial means of gathering evidence implicating the agents themselves.

A joint statement by the Justice Department and the Department of Homeland Security, however, denied that any such change was underway.

Continued on Page A14

Cooperating With ICE
Blue states already work closely with Immigration and Customs Enforcement on tens of thousands of criminal cases a year. Page A14.

New York City Horse Carriages Poised to Ride Into the Sunset

By JOHN LELAND
New York’s City Council seemed poised to finally ban carriage horses from Central Park, with a strong push from the Council speaker and conditional support from the mayor. If the ban goes through, it will be the end of an era.

That era, of course, is the era of battles over carriage horses in Central Park.

Almost from the day the first ones appeared in the 1860s, critics have sought to ban or regulate them. The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, or A.S.P.C.A., was formed in 1866 after its founder witnessed the mistreatment of a New York carriage horse. Its inaugural seal, which now adorns the founder’s grave at Green-Wood Cemetery in Brooklyn, shows a sword-wielding angel protecting a cart horse from its abusive driver.

Yet for all the controversies around them, the horses and their carriages have remained a part of

NEAL BOENZI/THE NEW YORK TIMES

Central Park in 1985. The rides are tied to the city’s romance.

the iconography of New York — at least in the imagination of tourists, who plop down a city-regulated $72.22 for a 20-minute ride.
After all, what is New York — the imagined New York, that is — if not the romantic wonderland where Robert Redford and Jane Fonda ride a horse-drawn carriage in the opening scene of “Barefoot in the Park”? Or where

Continued on Page A17

NATIONAL A11-18
A Family’s Multiple Tragedies
The Boissas sailed into San Francisco Bay to spread the ashes of one of their own. Then a wave struck. PAGE A11

Drug Deaths Rising in West
The increase is in contrast to a national decline in overdose fatalities. The reasons are a matter of debate. PAGE A12

INTERNATIONAL A4-10
Transit Line in an Arctic City
Jacinto Marques left Angola for Canada’s frozen edge. Now he is running a bus service in Iqaluit. PAGE A4

Indian Activist’s Hunger Strike
The police took away Sonam Wangchuk, who has protested botched exams affecting millions of students. PAGE A7

SPORTS D1-8
Not Second Best to the Jazz
If Utah had had the top pick in the N.B.A. draft instead of No. 2, Darryn Peterson was still the choice. PAGE D1

ARTS C1-6
The Internet, the Band
Members of the innovative group discuss how they managed to branch out and still grow stronger. PAGE C1

A Most Challenging ‘Odyssey’
To film the movie, its director and cinematographer made use of modern tools and classic techniques. PAGE C1

BUSINESS B1-7
Sanctions Could Imperil Dollar
The Trump administration has recently sought to scale back the measures as adversaries develop workarounds that some experts worry could erode the currency’s supremacy. PAGE B1

A World Cup Betting Bonanza
The soccer tournament has helped propel the prediction markets Kalshi and Polymarket to new user records, creating what may be the largest gambling event in history. PAGE B1

OPINION A20-21
John McWhorter PAGE A21

OBITUARIES A19
1st Irish Actress to Win Oscar
Brenda Fricker, 81, was honored for playing a stoic mother in “My Left Foot” and achieved cult status as a pigeon whisperer in “Home Alone 2.”

