Suspect allegedly posed as officer; search underway

BROOKLYN PARK, Minn. — Hundreds of law officers fanned out across a Minneapolis suburb Saturday in pursuit of a man who authorities say posed as a police officer and fatally shot a Democratic state lawmaker in her home in what Governor Tim Walz called “a politically motivated assassination.” Authorities said the suspect also shot and wounded a second lawmaker and was believed to be trying to flee the area.

Democratic former House speaker Melissa Hortman and her husband, Mark, were killed in their Brooklyn Park home. Senator John Hoffman, also a Democrat, and his wife, Yvette, were injured at their Champlin address, about 9 miles away.

Authorities identified the suspect as 57-year-old Vance Boelter, and the FBI issued a reward of up to $50,000 for information.

For military and Trump, pomp or politics on the parade grounds?

WASHINGTON — Thomas Levitre, a retired stonemason from Blackstone, Mass., voted for President Trump three times and, in 2017, traveled to Washington for his first inauguration.

So when Trump arranged for a massive parade of soldiers and tanks to roll through the streets of Washington in celebration of the Army's 250th anniversary — which happens to fall on the president's 79th birthday — Levitre wanted to be there in person, driving 420 miles overnight to arrive in time for the festivities on Saturday.

A split screen show of force as a divided nation takes to the streets, one side in celebration, the other in dissent

President Trump presided over a show of American military might in the nation's capital Saturday evening, a celebration of the 250th anniversary of the US Army that became a test of wills and competing imagery, with demonstrators around the country decrying his expansion of executive power.

Trump sat in a reviewing stand on Constitution Avenue as armored vehicles dating from two world wars and overflights of 80-year-old bombers and modern fighters shook downtown Washington. The city was locked down, divided by a wall of tall, black crowd-control fences designed to assure that the parade, the first of its kind since US troops returned from the Gulf War in 1991, was an uninterrupted demonstration of history and American power.

Trump, sitting between his wife, Melania Trump, and Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth, was scheduled to speak at sundown. Yet even before he arrived, the day encapsulated the sharpness of America's divide over immigration, free speech, and Trump's determination to reshape the government, universities, and cultural institutions to adopt his worldview.

By design, military parades are part national celebration and part international intimidation, and Trump has wanted one in Washington since he attended a Bastille Day parade in Paris in 2017. Formally, the parade celebrates the decision by the

Vaccine firm finds few protections from backlash

Dwight Morrow was thrilled to land a job at Moderna in June 2023 after its blockbuster COVID-19 vaccine had turned the once-obscure Cambridge biotech into a household name.

Morrow, a molecular and cellular biologist, said he was among about 600 people hired by the company over two weeks during a period of explosive growth. As executive director of biological science, he led two dozen scientists focused on the microscopic fatty spheres that Moderna used to deliver messenger RNA into human cells to produce vaccines and experimental drugs.

But after Moderna and the pharmaceutical giant Pfizer helped tame the pandemic with rival mRNA vaccines, both firms struggled to persuade people to get booster shots. Last December, with Moderna burning through cash and its second approved product, a shot for respiratory syncytial virus, generating disappointing sales, Morrow
