

‘Bro, I’m going to [expletive] shoot you.’

OFFICER NICHOLAS O’MALLEY to Stephenson King, according to a police report

Officer pleads not guilty to manslaughter charge

JONATHAN WIGGS/GLOBE STAFF/POOL

Investigating officers wrote that Nicholas O’Malley’s statement about what happened “was not factually true.”

Prosecutors say no justification for shooting; union outraged at decision

By Lea Skene and Sean Cotter
GLOBE STAFF

For the first time in more than three decades, a Boston police officer has been charged with manslaughter after fatally shooting a suspect in a carjacking last week, a swift decision from prosecutors who determined the officer had no justification for firing at a moving vehicle.

Leaders of the department’s largest union immediately expressed outrage at the manslaughter charge, saying that level of scrutiny is unfair and will cause officers to second-guess themselves in critical moments.

Officer Nicholas O’Malley, 33, pleaded not guilty and was released following his arraignment Thursday in Roxbury Municipal Court. He’s charged in the death of Stephenson King, 39, who was shot March 11 while he allegedly tried to flee a traffic stop in a stolen car.

O’Malley told investigators he fired because he feared for the life of another officer on the scene, believing his colleague was about to be run over. But Assistant District Attorney Ian Polumbaum said in court that investigators determined O’Malley’s explanation wasn’t reasonable, citing witness testimony and footage from police body cameras. The other officer, Polumbaum said, “was in greater danger of being struck by those bullets than he ever was by the car.” While the law affords police officers deference for split-second decisions, he said, “We keep in mind the law and common sense.” Commissioner Michael Cox said in a statement Thursday that it was “a difficult day for our department and our city.” While he would not comment on the shooting because it is a criminal case, he said, “We are committed to ensuring the safety of our officers and the public. This is a tragic incident, and we are working to understand what happened and prevent it from happening again.”

OFFICER, Page A6

Boston World Cup effort gets a boost and takes a blow

Federal money released but key fund-raiser quits

By Chris Serres, Michael Silverman, and Jason Laughlin
GLOBE STAFF

It was one big step forward and one apparent step back this week for the local committee acting as host of the seven World Cup games in Boston. After months of waiting, the federal government announced Wednesday that it is releasing $46 million to Massachusetts for security for the event. Yet the sudden exit of a top fund-raising executive with Boston’s organizing committee raised fresh questions about the region’s readiness to host the massive spectacle in less than three months.

The nearly simultaneous twin announcements came on the heels of a months-long standoff between Boston Soccer 26, the host committee stacked with members close to Patriots owner Robert Kraft, and the town of Foxborough over security funding at Gillette Stadium. That dispute was resolved this week, but not before drawing unwanted national attention to the Boston host committee’s financial struggles and logistical missteps. For weeks, doubts have swirled in Greater Boston business circles about whether the committee would be able to pull off its grand vision for its role in one of the world’s largest sporting events, or whether plans would have to be scaled back.

WORLD CUP, Page A6

Disgraced doctor faces more charges

Indictment cites sexual assault, including rape

By Liz Kowalczyk and Elizabeth Koh
GLOBE STAFF

A Middlesex County grand jury has indicted Dr. Derrick Todd on charges that he sexually assaulted 11 patients, signaling an expansion of the criminal case into his treatment of hundreds of patients at some of the state’s leading medical institutions. The once-prominent Boston rheumatologist, who had previously been charged with the rape of two patients, now faces an additional three counts of rape and 17 counts of indecent assault and battery on a person 14 or over, prosecutors announced Thursday.

More than 250 patients have accused Todd in civil suits of sexually assaulting them under the guise of medical exams and treatment over more than a decade at Brigham and Women’s and Brigham and Women’s Faulkner hospitals in Boston and Charles River Medical Associates in Framingham. In the new charges, prosecutors allege Todd, 52, “conducted unnecessary and excessively prolonged pelvic and breast examinations” on patients at the Framingham office between May 2021 and May 2023. Todd performed purported pelvic floor therapy, a treatment to strengthen the pelvic floor muscles, on patients at the Framingham office between May 2021 and May 2023. Todd performed purported pelvic floor therapy, a treatment to strengthen the pelvic floor muscles, on patients at the Framingham office between May 2021 and May 2023. Todd performed purported pelvic floor therapy, a treatment to strengthen the pelvic floor muscles, on patients at the Framingham office between May 2021 and May 2023.

DOCTOR, Page B4

The White House raced to find ways to reassure Americans as oil prices see-sawed again after a series of Iranian strikes on oil and gas facilities. A5.

Nearly 150 workers at a Springfield factory who were laid off because Red Line shells shipped from China had been seized will return to work. B1.

Senator Elizabeth Warren endorsed Graham Platner in the Senate Democratic primary in Maine. B1.

“Project Hail Mary” unfolds like a very satisfying beach read, writes critic Odie Henderson, who gives the movie four stars. G1.

Spring it on you

Friday: Warmer, rain late. High 48-53. Low 38-43.

Saturday: Getting better. High 49-54. Low 34-39.

Sunrise: 6:48 Sunset: 6:56

Weather and Comics, G6-7.

VOL. 309, NO. 79

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

FEELING THE PINCH

With lobster prices soaring, restaurants struggle to keep the beloved rolls reasonable

By Kara Baskin
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

How much would you pay for a lobster roll? Martha Stewart recently declared that she wouldn’t serve a $60 one at her new Foxwoods Resort Casino restaurant. In the swanky Hamptons, chefs are bracing for a spendy summer, predicting that lobster roll prices will approach $50.

Maine’s catch of lobsters declined for the fourth straight year, state fishing regulators said, as the industry continued to grapple with soaring business costs, inflation, and climate change. The haul of lobster has declined every year since 2021 amid warming oceans, spurring lobsters’ migration to Canadian waters.

Lobster rolls aren’t quite $50 in Boston, but they’re getting close. That’s put restaurateurs in a precarious position, wondering how much is too much to charge for an iconic menu item that tourists and locals demand. In many cases, it’s better to break even than to lose customers.

“I can’t really charge you $100 for a lobster roll, even though, over the last two weeks, maybe I should be charging $70 or $80,” says Row 34’s Jeremy Sewall, whose restaurants are known for creamy lobster rolls.

“There is a ceiling,” he says. “When you get over 50 bucks, I have a little twinge of guilt that we’re charging so much for food, even though it’s the correct price.”

Saltie Girl’s Kathy Sidell has always tried to keep her lobster roll at $42 or under. “On rare occasions when the prices skyrocket, I will raise the price to

LOBSTER ROLLS, Page A7

The creamy lobster roll at Row 34 in Kenmore Square.

ANDREW BURKE-STEVENS

OLIVER PARINI FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Shannon McDermott played guide “Barb” with a bus full of tourists/activists in Burlington, Vt.

What looks like a light-hearted ‘tour’ of Vt.’s ICE facilities is really no joke

By Paul Heintz
GLOBE STAFF

BURLINGTON, Vt. — They didn’t come for the fall foliage, or the skiing — not even for the freshly boiled maple syrup.

Instead of the natural wonders of the Green Mountain State, the two-dozen people who gathered for a bus tour Tuesday in this city’s tourist hot spot had come to see an unwelcome transplant to Vermont — ICE, and not the frozen kind.

“Good morning and welcome to the first-ever tour of a brand-new tour company: ICE Tours VT,” one of the hosts said through a microphone. “My name is Barb, and I’ll be your

‘The goal is for the public to take action against these facilities.’

BLAINE PAXTON,
*who is behind
ICE Tours VT*

Local and state police in Vermont point fingers at protesters for violent clash last week in South Burlington. B1.

tour guide today.”

Her name was not Barb, and this was not a tour company of any vintage. Rather, it was an elaborate work of performance art designed to bring attention to one of Vermont’s least-known specialties: hosting facilities for US Immigration and Customs Enforcement and other branches of the Department of Homeland Security.

Despite its liberal reputation, the state has become home in recent decades to a large number of DHS facilities, including surveillance centers that fuel its immigration enforcement actions throughout the state. The tour was part of a larger effort to raise awareness about the presence of ICE facilities in Vermont and to encourage people to take action against them.

TOUR, Page A7