

One day in the turbulence of the Twin Cities

As federal immigration enforcement reorients public life, some fear going outside, while others take to the streets

This article is by Robert Klemko, Molly Hennessy-Fiske, Anna Liss-Roy, Daniel Wu, Joshua Lott, Erin Patrick O'Connor and Justine McDaniel

MINNEAPOLIS — On the seventh Friday of the largest immigration enforcement operation in a U.S. city, during a presidency defined by the issue, a growing cadre of activists searched tinted car windows for masked federal agents. A man facing a deportation order in connection with a rape more than 20 years ago begged one of those agents for a final moment to say goodbye to the mother of his children. A child care worker blowing desperately on a whistle sprinted after two federal officers pursuing a person. And a 22-year-old Ecuadorian asylum seeker ventured out nervously to a new job in a city that seemed to be tilting on end, in a country threatening to shake her loose.

An estimated 3,000 people have been arrested since Operation Metro Surge began, according to Department of Homeland Security officials, following crack-downs in Chicago; New Orleans; Portland, Oregon; Memphis; Charlotte; and Los Angeles. In relative terms, Metro Surge dwarfs those other efforts, with more officers — about 2,000 to begin with — flooding the streets

SEE MINNEAPOLIS ON A8

TIM EVANS/REUTERS

DOJ sending prosecutors to Minnesota amid surge

BY PERRY STEIN, JEREMY ROEBUCK AND YASMEEN ABUTALEB

The Justice Department is sending prosecutors from Midwestern states to help the Minnesota U.S. attorney's office as it grapples with a severe shortage of staff amid a surge of federal immigration officers, according to three people familiar with the personnel moves.

Top Justice Department officials made the urgent requests to U.S. attorneys in more than a half-dozen states over the weekend as the Trump administration prepares for the possibility of filing charges against state officials and more protesters.

Officials asked the U.S. attorneys to send prosecutors for stints in the Minnesota federal prosecutor's office that could last a couple of weeks each, according to the people familiar with the plan, who spoke on the

SEE PROSECUTORS ON A6

Protests: She helped him flee a rally — then learned who he is. A7

BRIDGET BENNETT/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

TOP: A demonstrator stands in front of federal agents during a protest outside the Whipple Federal Building in the Minneapolis area on Friday, nine days after an Immigration and Customs Enforcement officer fatally shot Renée Good in the city. ABOVE: Alyssa Winter, left, leads an ICE watch training session at a coffee shop in Minneapolis, where activists are on the lookout for federal agents.

Lindsey Halligan departs as U.S. attorney in Virginia

Resignation comes after two judges said they intended to replace her

BY STEVE THOMPSON, SALVADOR RIZZO AND JEREMY ROEBUCK

Lindsey Halligan, a Trump administration lawyer who was named head of a key U.S. attorney's office in Virginia last year with instructions to seek criminal charges against President Donald Trump's perceived political adversaries, left her post at the Justice Department on Tuesday.

Halligan's departure followed a pair of extraordinary moves by two federal judges who issued court orders hours earlier saying they intended to replace Halligan at the helm of the U.S. attorney's office for the Eastern District of Virginia and threatening disciplinary sanctions for any government lawyer who continued to refer to her as U.S. attorney in legal filings.

The separate actions by Chief Judge M. Hannah Lauck and Judge David J. Novak, who were nominated by President Barack Obama and Trump, respectively, signaled a breaking point for the

SEE ATTORNEY ON A10

Americans are warming to Germans' obsession with opening windows

Lüften, the practice of airing out one's home (no matter the season), has gone viral on U.S. social media — as 'house burping'

BY AARON WIENER IN BERLIN

After moving to Berlin from Honolulu, Wyatt Gordon was surprised when his new German roommate marched into his bedroom at 8 a.m. and threw open the windows.

It turned out that his cohabitant, Laura, maintained a strict ventilation regime. Three times a day, at precise times, all the windows in the apartment needed to be opened. It didn't matter whether it was the dead of winter or a weekend morning, or if Gordon had company. Rules were rules.

"I had men and women in my bed that I'd brought home from the club or wherever," said Gordon, now 35, a city planner originally from Richmond. As is common on Berlin weekends, they would crawl into bed around dawn — "only to be woken up an hour later by a blast of ice-cold air," he recalled. "How do you explain to the person laying in bed next to you that this is what the German culture demands of us?"

How, in other words, to explain lüften?

Lüften, meaning "airing out" or "ventilation," is dogma in German households. Rain or shine, hot or cold (which, in

SEE GERMANY ON A13

IN THE NEWS

Nervous markets As President Donald Trump made threats over Greenland, fears of a trade war sent stocks tumbling globally. A15

Ready to serve In a historic moment for Virginia, Adam Spanberger — a computer engineer who said he's happy working behind the scenes — became the first gentleman. B13

THE NATION
Vice President JD Vance and Usha Vance are expecting their fourth child. A3
The Justice Department is considering easing limits on selling and shipping guns. A3

THE WORLD
Trump said the U.K.'s "stupidity" regarding the Chagos Islands justifies acquiring Greenland. A13
A clash in Syria threatened the security of detention centers for Islamic State militants. A14

THE ECONOMY
The Trump administration is channeling ire over soaring health costs toward insurers, but experts say care providers are to blame. A18
Stick to a savings plan and avoid panic-selling and scare tactics on gold and crypto, Michelle Singletary writes. A18

STYLE
As "Queer Eye" begins its D.C.-set final season, uneasiness emerges behind the scenes. B1

SPORTS
Carlos Beltrán is elected to baseball's Hall of Fame despite the Houston Astros sign-stealing scandal. Andrew Jones gets the nod, too. B7

THE REGION
A former Navy SEAL was granted parole in Virginia after spending nearly 30 years in prison for murder. B13

FOOD
Grocery shelves are awash with chicken soup brands. We taste-tested and ranked 11 of the most popular. E1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A15
COMICS.....B4
OBITUARIES.....B16
OPINION PAGES.....A16
TELEVISION.....B6
WORLD NEWS.....A11

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post
Year 149, No. 54468

Davos emerges as crisis summit

Friction over Greenland escalates as Trump assails European leaders

BY CAT ZAKRZEWSKI, EMILY DAVIES AND ISHAAN THAROOR

DAVOS, SWITZERLAND — President Donald Trump's demands to take over Greenland, reiterated in an overnight barrage of social media posts, are transforming this week's annual gathering of the global elite into an emergency diplomatic summit, as European leaders prepared to use the president's arrival here Wednesday to de-escalate the spiraling crisis.

Europe may not have a home-field advantage in Davos. The United States is seeking to dominate this year's World Economic Forum by sending its largest and most senior delegation in history. Meetings with senior Trump officials are among the most sought-after engagements in town as European leaders, already reeling from U.S. tariff policies, find themselves once again navigating a ruptured relationship with the White House.

Over mulled wine and canapés, SEE DAVOS ON A12

NATO: Pentagon plans to cut U.S. participation in elements of bloc. A6

Military law: Immoral orders can be disobeyed, archbishop says. A12

Cook's fate, Fed future at stake at high court

Powell probe adds to concerns over central bank's independence

BY JUSTIN JOUVENAL AND ANDREW ACKERMAN

The legality of President Donald Trump's push to fire Federal Reserve governor Lisa Cook was already one of the biggest issues of the Supreme Court term before a bombshell dropped a little over a week ago.

Fed Chair Jerome H. Powell revealed on Jan. 11 that he was under criminal investigation and accused Trump appointees of using the inquiry to undermine the independence that has allowed the powerful central bank to guide the economy in the interest of the public rather than the president.

The development raised the already high stakes as the Supreme Court hears arguments in Cook's case Wednesday. When they decide Cook's fate, the justices could also help determine Powell's future with the Fed, whether Trump can bend the bank to his will and, ultimately, the direction of the economy. A decision is expected by this summer.

"It's no exaggeration to say that SEE COURT ON A4

Gun case: The high court appears skeptical of Hawaii restrictions. A4