IMMIGRATION 'CRACKDOWN'

Starmer ridiculed over plan with no cap on numbers, recycled policies — and which goes against everything he's ever believed in

LABOUR'S TAKING US ALL FOR FOOLS

By Martin Beckford and David Barrett

SIR Keir Starmer was accused of 'taking the public for fools' as he proposed an immigration crackdown — after years of backing open borders.

The Prime Minister insisted in a major speech yesterday that he had long believed in wanting to limit the number of new arrivals to Britain and booting out foreign criminals.

He warned the country risks becoming an 'island of strangers' and that high migration numbers had caused 'incalculable damage' to public services, housing and the economy.

But he was dubbed 'Starmer Chameleon' by the Tories who highlighted how he had said the exact opposite before entering No 10.

The Government's long-awaited White Paper promised to curb the power of judges to block deportations and to reduce immigration to Britain by 98,000 a year.

However, the PM's tough language — described
