

Bowser prolongs cooperation via order

Mayor’s edict instructs D.C. to work with federal authorities indefinitely

BY EMILY DAVIES,
NATALIE ALLISON
AND MEAGAN FLYNN

D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser (D) on Tuesday ordered indefinite coordination between the city and federal law enforcement officials, a powerful indication of her willingness to cooperate with President Donald Trump’s effort to take over public safety in the capital city.

Bowser issued an executive order that requires local coordination with federal law enforcement “to the maximum extent allowable by law within the District.” The order gives no expiration date.

By law, Trump’s federalization of the D.C. police force lasts 30 days and is set to expire next week. Bowser’s announcement may quell any showdown over what happens after that deadline passes by authorizing continued coordination between the city and federal authorities.

In a statement on social media, Bowser said that her order would “provide the pathway forward beyond the Presidential emergency.” She has previously said that because of the federal government’s authority over the District — D.C.’s unique status under the U.S. Constitution gives Congress ultimate say over city laws and

SEE BOWSER ON A18

‘We’re going in’: Trump says he plans to send Guard to Chicago. A6

Judge deems Trump’s use of Guard in L.A. illegal

Ruling says troops can remain in city but cannot enforce civilian laws

BY MARK BERMAN

The Trump administration illegally used National Guard troops it deployed to Los Angeles this summer amid protests over immigration raids, willfully violating a law that prohibits the military from carrying out domestic law enforcement, a federal judge ruled Tuesday.

U.S. District Judge Charles R. Breyer in San Francisco said federal officials violated the Posse Comitatus Act and “expressly instructed” troops that they “could engage in certain law enforcement activities: setting up protective perimeters, traffic blockades, crowd control, and the like.”

“That instruction was incorrect,” he wrote.

Breyer’s ruling, in a case brought by California Gov. Gavin Newsom (D), came as President Donald Trump has argued that National Guard deployments are needed to fight crime in cities including Chicago, Baltimore and New York. Using his presidential authority over the D.C. National Guard, Trump last month began

SEE CALIFORNIA ON A6

PHOTOS BY ED RAM/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

On Ukraine front, supplies fall from the sky

Some drones hunt the enemy in grinding trench war, but others bring soldiers borscht and more

BY SIOBHÁN O’GRADY
AND SERHII KOROLCHUK
IN EASTERN UKRAINE

The troops huddled around their drone in the dark, carefully fastening the 40-pound payload to the bottom before launching it into the clear August sky.

From an underground base, a commander named Viktor watched on a fuzzy screen as the drone homed in on a cluster of trees along the front line near Pokrovsk, where a fire was already burning from a recent hit, and then released its payload.

Packages tumbled down and a Ukrainian soldier — glowing white on the thermal camera — scurried out of his trench to collect them. “Yeah, guys! Great work,” said Viktor, who is being identified only by his first name in keeping with Ukrainian military protocol. “Mission complete.”

TOP, LEFT TO RIGHT: Oleksandr, 39, Mykhailo, 34, and Valerii, 41, all infantry soldiers in Ukraine’s 68th Jaeger Brigade, have spent time in frontline positions that were supplied by drone. ABOVE: Food, medicine, cigarettes and other products are among the items delivered by drone.

SEE UKRAINE ON A11

In a wartime sky congested with drones from both sides, this was not a typical attack mission to destroy enemy troops or their equipment. Instead, the Ukrainian drone unit had dropped food and water to their own foot soldiers who, under constant surveillance by Russian drones, could not be resupplied by the usual means.

Such missions have become increasingly common across Ukraine’s front, where ground troops often deploy with enough supplies to hold a position for just a few days but — facing

House panel releases first batch of Epstein files

BY KADIA GOBA,
MARIANNA SOTOMAYOR
AND LIZ GOODWIN

The House Oversight and Government Reform Committee on Tuesday night released 33,295 pages of documents related to convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein as a bipartisan group of lawmakers seeks more transparency from the Trump administration on the subject.

But the highly anticipated tranche of documents provided to Congress by the Trump administration appears to mostly contain information that was already in the public domain, drawing complaints from Democrats and doing little to tamp down an effort in the GOP-controlled House to force the Trump administration to turn over more documents.

“The 33,000 pages of Epstein documents [the committee chairman] has decided to ‘release’ were already mostly public information,” Rep. Robert Garcia (California), the panel’s ranking Democrat, said in a statement. “To the American people — don’t let this fool you.”

House Oversight Chairman James Comer (R-Kentucky) subpoenaed the Justice Department for the documents in August, and a statement from his office indicated he expected the department to continue producing records

SEE EPSTEIN ON A4

Financial data: Bessent accused of withholding key Epstein info. A4

HEDAYAT SHAH/AP

Afghanistan appeals for aid after deadly quake

Civil defense workers, soldiers and locals clear rubble Tuesday in the village of Mazar Dara after a 6.0-magnitude earthquake struck eastern Afghanistan late Sunday, killing at least 1,400. Story, A8

Trump says Alabama to house Space Command

Move from Colorado is latest twist in partisan fight over agency’s home

BY NOAH ROBERTSON

President Donald Trump said Tuesday that he is relocating the U.S. Space Command headquarters from Colorado to Alabama, marking the latest twist in a years-long partisan battle over the agency’s home.

During an Oval Office announcement surrounded by members of Alabama’s congressional delegation, Trump said the facility would be moved to “the beautiful locale of a place called Huntsville,” where the U.S. government houses a host of related infrastructure.

Trump and the lawmakers around him framed the decision as a common-sense choice for American national security, citing the Air Force’s original preference to base the command in Huntsville. But the latest reversal in the agency’s location caps an intense lobbying campaign from both states — spanning three administrations and two presidents — for the headquarters and the billions of dollars in investment expected to flow from it.

The president acknowledged the pressure in his remarks Tuesday, mentioning how often the lawmakers standing around him would raise the issue.

“You’re not going to call me anymore and talk about this subject, right? You promise?” Trump said.

Space Command dates to the 1980s, when it was established to oversee the U.S. military’s vast array of satellites and coordinate

SEE COMMAND ON A18

BUSINESS NEWS.....	A13
CAROLYN HAX.....	B3
COMICS.....	B4

METRO.....	B13
OBITUARIES.....	B17
OPINION PAGES.....	A15

POLITICS/NAION.....	A3
SPORTS.....	B7
STYLE.....	B1

TELEVISION.....	B6
WEATHER.....	B18
WORLD.....	A8

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post / Year 148, No. 54328

Intelligence HEALTH BRIEF

Forward-looking, exclusive analysis to stay up to date on health policy news. Sign up for the newsletter.