

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 2025

‘People talk about auspicious beginnings but never inspiring endings.’

ANDREW BROWN, Frederick staff member

PHOTOS BY CRAIG F. WALKER/GLOBE STAFF

Teacher Taylor Roberts hugged seventh-grader Nicole Barros Cardoso on the final day at Lilla G. Frederick Pilot Middle School.

IN BOSTON, THE END OF THE MIDDLE SCHOOL

With Frederick’s closing, city moves on from once-favored model

By Christopher Huffaker

GLOBE STAFF

The three seventh-graders huddled around a laptop, scouring news articles on immigration. As their conversation veered at times, their teacher, Taylor Roberts, encouraged them to focus: This was their final assignment for her class, a presentation on family separation.

But on that sunny afternoon earlier this month at the Lilla G. Frederick Pilot Middle School, it was hard to concentrate. Amid the chatter about summer plans and a trip to an amusement park, the three teens talked about their own separation. This year would be their last at the Frederick, Boston Public Schools’ last standalone middle school, which closed its doors Monday.

“Our friend group, everyone’s going to go their own way,” said Honesty Graham, as she spun a hot pink fidget toy around her hand. “Everyone’s being split up.”

The district marked the Frederick for closure at the end of the school year as part of its broader effort to address de-

SCHOOL, Page A10

Eighth-graders Alexis Pierre and Cyrus Dorzelma arrived for the Frederick’s promotion ceremony.

Kennedy School makes plan for foreign students

Remote study will be an option and some can attend college in Canada

By Aidan Ryan

GLOBE STAFF

Harvard Kennedy School this week assured its international students they will be able to finish their degrees — online or at a satellite location in Canada — even if the Trump administration is successful in its efforts to ban Harvard from hosting foreign students this fall.

The announcement is a first at Harvard, where multiple schools are in the process of making contingency plans for a what would happen if the university does not prevail in its legal efforts to beat back President Trump’s plan to bar international students at the Cambridge campus.

Under the plan announced Tuesday, both incoming and returning international students would be able to study remotely, while returning students would also have the option to attend the University of Toronto’s Munk School of Global Affairs and Public Policy to finish their Kennedy School degrees.

“We are announcing these contingency plans now to alleviate the uncertainty many students feel, but we will not officially launch these programs unless there is sufficient demand from students who are unable to come to the United States due to visa or entry restrictions,” Kennedy School dean Jeremy Weinstein wrote in an email to the school’s community Tuesday.

The plans were announced after a federal judge blocked the Trump administration’s Harvard international student ban in a series of pre-

HARVARD, Page A6

Rubio defends Trump’s Iran claims

Says facility key to making weapons was destroyed

By David E. Sanger and Tyler Pager

NEW YORK TIMES

THE HAGUE — President Trump and Secretary of State Marco Rubio made their most detailed case yet on Wednesday at a NATO summit in the Netherlands for why they believe the American attack on Iran dealt a fatal blow to its nuclear ambitions, pushing back on the findings of a US intelligence report and more cautious statements from international nuclear inspectors.

►NATO allies approve an ambitious spending goal sought by Trump. A3.

While Trump largely repeated his assertions that Iran’s nuclear facilities were “obliterated,” Rubio stepped in with the first description of why he thought the attack had set back the Iranians’ progress for years rather than by only a few months, as a preliminary Defense Intelligence Agency report said. His argument centered on evidence that a “conversion facility” — which is key to converting nuclear fuel from a gas into the form needed to produce a nuclear weapon — has been destroyed.

The question of whether Iran could recover from the strike on Sunday morning dominated the meeting of the 32 NATO nations. It overshadowed

MIDEAST, Page A4

A second BU coach faced complaints

Soccer teammates said player was ‘being groomed’

By Bob Hohler

GLOBE STAFF

Shayla Brown was taught that if she saw something she should say something. On Sept. 14, 2024, she decided she could stay quiet no longer.

Brown, now a senior midfielder on the Boston University women’s soccer team, contacted the university’s confidential ethics hotline and reported a disturbing allegation about the team’s head coach, Casey Brown.

Four days later, Shayla Brown went further, sharing details with the team’s sports psychologist. The coach, she said, was acting inappropriately toward one of BU’s key players, focusing excessively on her and trying to manipulate her in ways that were distressing to the player and her teammates.

This was not a case of a coach coddling a prized player, Shayla Brown said. Her teammate was “being groomed,” she told the psychologist.

The next day, Shayla Brown and 17 other BU women’s soccer players reported similar allegations to BU’s Equal Opportunity Office. Before long, their teammate who was allegedly targeted shared her experience with school officials, as well.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY, Page C6

Relief picture

Thursday: Cloudy, showers. High: 68-73. Low: 59-64.

Friday: Cloudy, cool. High: 66-71. Low: 58-63.

Sunrise: 5:09 Sunset: 8:25

Comics and Weather, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 177

*

Suggested retail price $4.00

The vaccine advisory panel appointed by Robert F. Kennedy Jr. said it would review the current childhood vaccination schedule. A2.

The mayor of New Bedford appointed a new police chief from outside the department, a change from past practices. B1.

Seltzer maker Spindrift plans to roll out five soda flavors, as healthier sodas become the rage. D1.

Brown’s latest role: Fourth Senate run

He brings a varied resume to N.H. campaign

By James Pindell

GLOBE STAFF

Scott Brown’s famous pickup truck helped launch one of the biggest political upsets in Massachusetts history.

ANALYSIS

In 2010, Brown rode this symbol of his everyman appeal to victory in a special election for the US Senate, filling the seat left vacant by the death of Ted Kennedy.

At his victory party that night in Boston, Brown went off script, announcing that his college-age daughter was single, drawing laughs from the crowd and visible embarrassment from his daughter.

That was 15 and a half years ago. Both of his daughters have married, and Brown is now a grandfather.

And the famous truck’s tailgate has been transformed into the back of a cute wooden bench.

Now, maybe it’s time for a Tesla Cybertruck. On Tuesday, the 65-year-old Republican launched his fourth bid for the US Senate, and his second in New Hampshire, vying for the

BROWN, Page A7

A FUTURE IN THE NBA

SARAH STIER/GETTY IMAGES

Maine native Cooper Flagg was chosen first in the NBA Draft by Dallas, the first No. 1 overall pick from New England since Patrick Ewing in 1985. The Celtics took Hugo Gonzalez with the 28th pick. C1-2.

