KING Charles and Prince Harry's senior aides have held a secret peace summit, The Mail on Sunday can reveal, marking the first significant move towards resolving their rancorous family feud.

Sources said last week's meeting was the initial step in a 'rapprochement process' to restore the broken relationship between the Duke and Duchess of Sussex and the rest of the Royal Family.

Aptly, the talks were held at a London private members' club that champions international friendship, and whose patron is the King. It is not known whether it was Charles
