The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

Monday, November 2, 2026

Senate rivals seek beachhead in key county

Southern Maine voters often split ticket, a crucial factor in Collins-Jackson race

By Sam Brodey
GLOBE STAFF

WELLS, Maine — A key ingredient of Senator Susan Collins's hard-fought election victory six years ago was towns such as this one, nestled on a sandy stretch of the coast in southern Maine.

This time round, they may be the most important variable that determines if Collins can pull off another victory in an intense race, with control of the US Senate potentially on the line.

That's because Wells is home to an especially high share of ticket-splitting voters who have demonstrated a distaste for President Trump but an enduring affinity for Collins.

In 2020, 56 percent of Wells voters went for Joe Biden, to Trump's 42 percent, while 51 percent went for Collins over her Democratic challenger, Sara Gideon.

That result reflected Collins's 9-point victory statewide even as an anti-Trump wave washed over Maine — vindicating her strategy to pitch herself as an independent. And once again, in this year's contest against Democratic challenger Troy Jackson amid even more in-

MAINE, Page A7

JOE RAEDLE/GETTY IMAGES

Sally Loughin put up signs Saturday as Election Day approaches in Freeport, Maine.

ELECTION 2026

Murphy ailing
Senator Chris Murphy, a Connecticut Democrat, suffered a stroke. A6.

Question 6
The ballot initiative seeks to invest certain sales tax revenue into the conservation of land. B1.

A Michigan shocker
Representative Haley Stevens pulled her support for Abdul El-Sayed, the Democratic choice for Senate and her primary rival, and endorsed his Republican opponent. A2.

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

An aerial view shows what remains of the Riverview Condominiums on Mount Auburn Street in Cambridge.

Demolished condos, demoralized owners, and a confounding bill

All that's left of their homes: a cement slab and a legal mess

By Spencer Buell
GLOBE STAFF

CAMBRIDGE

Two years ago, they had floor-to-ceiling windows and an enviable view of the Charles River.

Now, the former residents of the nine-story, 66-unit Riverview condo building have just a large rectangle of pavement — one that, while legal issues play out in court, they cannot sell.

As the bill for having to demolish their own homes is coming due, the Cambridge condo owners say there is no clarity yet on when they can sell the land, or how much they'll get paid when it does sell.

The unusual circumstances of having to vacate and then destroy their building due to irreparable and dangerous structural issues have created a financial and legal mess, the Cambridge condo owners interviewed by the Globe say, as lawyers, banks, and neighbors try to agree how to divvy up the proceeds when the property finally sells.

"I think, for all of us, this has been a catastrophe," said Linda Salter, 80, who owned and lived in a Riverview unit for fewer than two years when she was told to evacuate it. "There is a strong sense of not being in control. We thought at this age we would be in control, and we're not."

Residents fled the building in 2024 after learning of longstanding issues with its concrete. Demolition, done by the city at their behest, finished this year.

In the meantime, the owners have had to continue to pay condo fees and taxes, not to mention lawyers.

DEMOLISHED, Page A10

Brigham nurses set to strike on Nov. 12

Negotiators to resume talks next week; walkout would be state's largest

By Allyson Chiu
GLOBE STAFF

One of Boston's largest hospitals is once again facing a looming strike after its nurses rejected a final contract offer and prepare to resume negotiations in a labor fight that has dragged on for months.

Unionized nurses at Brigham and Women's Hospital announced Sunday that they have scheduled an open-ended strike beginning Nov. 12, just three days after contract negotiations are set to resume. The announcement comes after nurses postponed a planned October walkout to review and vote on what the hospital described as its final offer.

The strike, involving roughly 4,000 nurses, would be the largest open-ended nursing walkout in Massachusetts history.

"This is not something we want to do," Kelly Morgan, a longtime labor and delivery nurse who chairs the bargaining committee, said in a phone interview Sunday. "We want to avoid this at all costs. But we are looking to protect the integrity of our contract and for the sustainability of our contract going forward."

The Brigham, one of the Mass General Brigham health system's two flagship hospitals, said in a statement that it received notice of the scheduled strike on Sunday.

"While we had hoped to avoid another strike, we are prepared to continue providing safe, high-quality care throughout any work stoppage, building on our experience and extensive contingency planning," the hospital said.

A federal mediator will assist in the negotiations, the union said.

Both sides have been engaged in tense talks for months.

On July 8, the union staged a one-day strike. The nurses were then locked out of the hospital for four additional days because management said it

NURSES, Page A10

Questions swirl over revered headmaster

Suffield Academy's leader on leave amid IRS probe

By Mike Damiano
GLOBE STAFF

Suffield Academy is reeling from the removal of its longtime headmaster amid a purported tax investigation.

The Connecticut boarding school has hired a crisis public relations agency and assured board members the school's own finances are not under investigation, according to current and former board members and public communications.

Parents and alumni, meanwhile, have largely been left in the dark since the school announced on Oct. 22 that Charles Cahn III, who had led Suffield for 22 years and was set to retire next summer, had been placed on leave, effective immediately, after the school learned of "an investigation by the Internal Revenue Service involving [Cahn]."

$100 million +
Suffield's endowment, double its value from six years ago

$1 million +
Charles Cahn's annual compensation, more than double since 2014.

One of the highest-paid boarding school leaders in New England, Cahn was widely regarded as a transformational figure at Suffield, a nearly two-century-old school of about 420 students near the Connecticut River between Springfield and Hartford. Just days before the announcement, the school had hosted a celebration in his honor during parents' weekend. Other plans to fete Cahn — and continue his legacy of fundraising success — were in the works.

"Everyone loved Charlie," said one parent of recent Suffield graduates (the parent, like others interviewed for this article, did not want to be named in an article about the investigation).

Since the announcement of Cahn's removal, the school has said almost nothing about what has

SUFFIELD, Page A10

I'd vote for this

Monday: Warm and sunny. High 67-72, low 49-54.

Tuesday: More sun. High 68-73, low 51-56.

Sunrise: 6:19. Sunset: 4:36.

Weather and comics, D4-5.

Obituaries, B6.

VOL. 310, NO. 125
*
Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4 44114

"We're going to crash into the ground," the pilot of a business jet exclaimed to air traffic controllers. All nine people aboard died in a fireball in Florida. A2.

The federal government's crackdown on immigration is creating business opportunities for Massachusetts companies. D1.

Protesters filled the heart of India's capital, creating a sprawling scene of mass resistance to the government of Prime Minister Narendra Modi over the cutting of voter rolls. A4.

A trio of Red Sox players Sunday won American League Gold Glove Awards: Caleb Durbin, Ceddanne Rafaela, and Wilyer Abreu. C7.

PATS STAGE SECOND-HALF COMEBACK

MATTHEW J. LEE/GLOBE STAFF

Defensive tackle Christian Barmore (90) and linebacker Gabe Jacas (50) celebrated after sacking Miami Dolphins quarterback Malik Willis in the New England Patriots' 24-19 win. C1.