CHOCPOINT

Why Strait of Hormuz is at centre of crisis

DUBAI

BY ALEX ABRAHAM
Senior Associate Editor

The war triggered by US-Israeli strikes on Iran has pushed one of the world's most critical maritime chokepoints — the Strait of Hormuz — to the centre of a rapidly escalating global energy crisis. Tanker traffic through the narrow passageway has plunged as shipping companies suspend operations and insurers withdraw coverage, sending oil prices soaring and forcing Gulf producers to cut exports.

Shipping activity through the strait has fallen by as much as 90 per cent, according to shipping analytics firm Kpler, as shipowners grow reluctant to risk vessels in waters increasingly threatened by missiles, drones and naval confrontation. Oil prices surged above $100 per barrel and briefly approached $120, reflecting fears that a prolonged disruption could choke off a major share of the world's energy supply.

The mounting disruption has triggered an international scramble to keep the shipping route open.

UAE says onion, tomato price rises temporary

Additional quantities of these products already supplied in abundant amounts

DUBAI

BY DHANUSHA GOKULAN
Chief Reporter

Price increases in some food commodities, such as onions and tomatoes, over the past two days are temporary and limited, the UAE Ministry of Economy and Tourism said yesterday.

The Ministry said the price changes were a natural result of the ongoing regional crisis and confirmed that additional quantities of these products have already been supplied in abundant amounts to ensure stable availability in markets.

Officials also affirmed that essential goods available nationwide are sufficient and that consumers have access to multiple alternatives.

The Ministry has also said there is no cause for concern regarding the availability or prices of goods, and said markets are expected to return to normal price levels quickly as supply continues to increase.

The Ministry has intensified monitoring of prices in local food markets since beginning of Ramadan. Since the war broke out, the Ministry has implemented policies to control price rises among nine key commodities: cooking oil, eggs, dairy products, rice, sugar, poultry, legumes, bread, and wheat.

Prior approval needed

Prices of these products cannot be increased without prior approval from the Ministry and the national committee formed for this purpose, it said.

Authorities said the UAE maintains a strategic stockpile of essential goods capable of covering market demand for up to six months.

The Ministry explained that this reserve is distributed across various regions of the country through a well-planned system designed to strengthen supply chains and enable a rapid response to market needs.

Officials also confirmed that shipping and supply movements are continuing normally through the country's entry points, while supply chains remain efficient, ensuring goods continue to reach local markets without disruption.
