

Feud escalates as Ill., Ore. accuse Trump of ‘invasion’

Texas National Guard set to deploy in Chicago over local leaders’ objections

By Julie Bosman, Shawn Hubler, and Anna Griffin

NEW YORK TIMES

CHICAGO — Officials in Illinois and Oregon stepped up efforts to block President Trump from deploying National Guard troops in the states’ cities, denouncing the effort as an attempted “invasion,” even as 200 soldiers from Texas were headed to Chicago.

The state of Illinois and the city of Chicago sued Trump on Monday over his effort to deploy National Guard troops to the city, calling the deployment “illegal, dangerous and unconstitutional.” The lawsuit was filed hours after the president ordered hundreds of Texas Guard soldiers to deploy for “federal protection missions” in Chicago and Portland, Ore.

On Sunday night, a federal judge blocked Trump from sending guard members from any state to Oregon, but her ruling did not cover Illinois. In its lawsuit, officials from Illinois and Chicago argued that the administration’s “provocative and arbitrary actions have threatened to undermine public safety by inciting a public outcry.”

A federal judge in Illinois, April M. Perry, declined to issue an immediate order Monday blocking the deployment of National Guard troops in the state.

Perry, a Biden appointee, described herself as “very troubled by the lack of answers” from federal lawyers to her questions about the

NATIONAL GUARD, Page A5

ICE site in Vt. has new target: social media

Program set to use ‘dark web,’ AI for location tips

By Paul Heintz

GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

WILLISTON, Vt. — Federal immigration authorities have picked a surprising place to ramp up their efforts to surveil the social media activity of those who are in the country illegally: Vermont.

Though the Trump administration has designated the liberal state a “sanctuary jurisdiction,” Vermont has also long served as an essential outpost of the Department of Homeland Security and, in particular, its most controversial arm, Immigration and Customs Enforcement. The department operates a constellation of offices in this suburb of Burlington, employing hundreds of people to gather and share information used to track, arrest, and deport certain noncitizens.

The department’s newest initiative, first reported by WIRED, would help ICE locate targets by scouring social media platforms and other publicly available websites for leads. According to department documents published as part of a request for information, the program would also use artificial intelligence capabilities, as well as “deep web” and “darknet” sources.

SURVEILLANCE, Page A5

Negotiators in place, deal is not

Combatants seek to agree to details of US plan; airstrikes still batter Gaza

By Claire Parker, Abbie Cheeseman, and Heba Farouk Mahfouz

WASHINGTON POST

SHARM EL-SHEIKH, Egypt — Israeli and Hamas officials were in Egypt on Monday for high-stakes negotiations over a US-backed plan to end the Gaza war, even as Israel continued to pummel parts of the enclave with heavy air and artillery strikes.

The two sides converged on this Red Sea resort town for indirect talks after months of deadlock to hash out the details of the plan’s first phase, one that mediators hoped would see a quick halt to the fighting and the rapid release of Israeli hostages, both dead and living, in exchange for Palestinian prisoners held by Israel and a surge in humanitarian aid. Thornier issues such as security and Gaza’s political future would be addressed at a later stage, officials said.

“The administration is working very hard to move the ball forward as quickly as we can,”

White House spokeswoman Karoline Leavitt told reporters Monday. “The president wants to see a cease-fire. He wants to see the hostages released. And the technical teams are discussing that as we speak.”

Senior Hamas official Khalil al-Hayya, who survived an Israel-

GAZA, Page A7

AN AGONY THAT WILL NOT FADE

Two years ago, Hamas attacked Israel. The ensuing horror shakes many in Boston area.

PHOTOS BY JOHN TLUMACKI/BOSTON GLOBE

At top, an exhibit remembering those killed on Oct. 7, 2023, includes shoes of the victims. Above, Nitzan Schlezinger viewed the burned-out shell of a car on display at the exhibit in South Boston. Her father was among the victims.

‘In many ways, it feels like it is still Oct. 7, 2023. We’re not even in post-trauma yet.’

RABBI MARC BAKER, of Combined Jewish Philanthropies of Greater Boston

By Katie Muchnick

GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Nitzan Schlezinger didn’t think anything of the alarms telling her to move to a bomb shelter at first.

The wailing sirens happened from time to time where she lived, in Tel Aviv. But within hours on the morning of Oct. 7, 2023, she would realize the scale of the Hamas-led attack in southern Israel.

Her dad was working as the lead paramedic for the Tribe of Nova music festival. Around 3,500 young Israelis were dancing to electronic music and celebrating the Jewish holiday of Sukkot, when rockets lit up the sky early in the morning.

JOHN WESSELS/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

A man with an infant walked past the memorials of Oct. 7 victims at the Nova festival grounds in southern Israel.

Later in the afternoon, she learned that her father, Asaf Schlezinger, was one of the roughly 360 people killed by the heavily armed Hamas-led militants who ambushed the festival. The militants also took more than 40 festival-goers as hostages.

“People came to dance or to work, like my father, and they never came back home,” said Schlezinger, 30.

Schlezinger will spend the anniversary of his death at an exhibit run by survivors of the Nova festival attacks, which opened on Sept. 26 in the former F.W. Webb build-

ANNIVERSARY, Page A7

This bid to fight hunger starts in harvested fields

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Gather’s Ally Lynch (left), Allie Kerivan, and Allison Bussiere salvaged carrots.

By Amanda Gokee

GLOBE STAFF

KINGSTON, N.H. — Carrots flew out of Terry O’Brien’s hands as he made split-second decisions about whether to keep them or toss them.

The first-rate specimens went into a bin destined for sale to restaurants, markets, and farm stands. Those that were too short, too gnarled, or just too weird looking were pitched back into the dusty field as “seconds,” perfectly edible but not good-looking enough to sell.

But those seconds weren’t going to waste. A small but eager crew followed in O’Brien’s wake, poring over the rejected carrots and scooping up those that could be donated to a local food pantry to help combat hunger.

“The fact that I know a lot of them are going to get used, it makes me feel better about leaving them,” said O’Brien, who has been running Hungry Heart Farm as a mostly solo venture for the past five years.

As the Trump administration has cut millions in federal funding for food assistance, local antihunger

GLEANNING, Page A6

Unruly crowds sought to take over the streets of several communities over the weekend, igniting confrontations with police. B1.

The Cambridge School Committee backed interim superintendent David Murphy to take the permanent role, ending a monthslong, difficult process. B1.

The glow from the Patriots’ win over Buffalo was dimmed by injury news: running back Antonio Gibson suffered a torn ACL and will not play again this season. C1.

Business confidence fell for the seventh straight month in Massachusetts. D1.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website: BostonGlobe.com

Glory, blah

Tuesday: Still quite warm. High 77-82, low 62-67.

Wednesday: Cooler, rain. High 66-71, low 45-50.

Sunrise: 6:48. Sunset: 6:15.

Weather and comics, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 308, NO. 99

*

Suggested retail price $4.00

