

THE BLAZE at Lineage Logistics' cold storage facility in Boyle Heights burns for a sixth day on Monday.

A big puzzle of a fire in Boyle Heights

Metal walls, collapsed roof, mazelike interior hamper crews fighting the days-old blaze.

By Salvador Hernandez and Alex Wigglesworth

To understand why it's been so hard for firefighters to contain the blaze that has burned for six days at a Boyle Heights cold storage facility — and why it will still take days to snuff it — consider the mazelike terrain.

The building, about the size of a city block, is filled with an estimated 85 million pounds of frozen food. It is more of a giant ice chest than a typical warehouse, with metal walls and thick foam insulation that have made it difficult to dismantle, officials say.

Jamie Stewart, a public information officer with the Los Angeles Fire Department, likened the construction to “two giant Yeti coolers” positioned side by side. Inside are enormous steel racks, about 50 feet tall and 600 feet long, stacked with the frozen food, he said. Large portions of the roof have collapsed and are resting atop those racks, so it has been unsafe for firefighters to enter, he said.

The building is so big and the flames are in such hard-to-reach areas that firefighters have needed to get creative with their approach, using water-dropping helicopters and aerial surveillance drones, he said.

They also have been limited in how they're fighting the fire from the roof because of the solar panels, and because extra weight may pose a risk to the integrity of the building, L.A. Fire Capt. Anthony Tubbs said. [See Fire, A6]

ALAN GREENSPAN, 1926 - 2026

Five-term chairman of the Federal Reserve

Lauded economist presided over a long period of prosperity before his reputation was tarnished

J. SCOTT APPLEWHITE Associated Press
ROCK-STAR STATUS
Alan Greenspan was assessed more critically after his retirement.

By Thomas S. Mulligan and Don Lee

Alan Greenspan, the former Federal Reserve Board chairman who presided over a long period of economic stability and prosperity and was accorded rock-star status in the financial world only to have his reputation tarnished in the wrenching recession and global credit crisis in 2008, has died at the age of 100.

A towering figure in American finance who influenced a generation of central bankers worldwide, Greenspan died Monday from complications of Parkinson's disease, according to his wife, Andrea Mitchell.

“To me he was my husband, who shaped my life from our very first date in 1984,” Mitchell said in a statement reported by NBC News, where she serves as the network's chief Washington correspondent. “He had ‘irrational exuberance.’” [See Greenspan, A10]

CLIVE DAVIS, 1932 – 2026

Record producer helped shape pop music for decades

By Nardine Saad

Music mogul Clive Davis, the celebrated producer and label executive who signed and nurtured genre-defining musicians such as Janis Joplin, Bruce Springsteen and Whitney Houston, died Monday at his home in New York City, according to Davis' representative, Aliza Rabinoff. He was 94.

Davis had recently been hospitalized with an upper respiratory infection. “To the world, our father was the iconic music legend whose vision, instincts and relentless pursuit of excellence shaped the soundtrack of countless lives,” his family said in a statement. “He discovered, mentored and championed the greatest artists in modern music history, leaving an indelible mark on culture that will endure for generations.

“To his family, Clive was Dad and Granddaddy, the steady presence at the center of our lives, the source of wisdom, strength, encouragement and unconditional love. No matter how extraordinary his professional accomplishments, he ne-

[See Davis, A6]

LAUSD chief resigns amid federal inquiry

Carvalho won praise for academic gains but had been sidelined since February raids.

By Howard Blume

Los Angeles Unified schools Supt. Alberto Carvalho, who has been under FBI investigation for four months, has resigned as leader of the nation's second-largest school system, bringing a breathtaking end to one of the district's most consequential and high-profile tenures.

Carvalho sent a resignation letter late Sunday to the L.A. Unified School District and to individual members of the Board of Education.

“It has been a great honor to serve you,” Carvalho began in a letter addressed to “the students, families, teachers, staff, and community of LAUSD.”

“Over the past four years, together, we have made historic progress — gains that belong to our students, our educators, staff and our communities,” Carvalho said. His letter only hinted at the reason behind the resignation and made no direct mention of the early morning FBI raids at his home and district office in late February that prompted his placement on paid leave and the appointment of an acting superintendent.

“Placing students first has always guided my work,” Carvalho said. “Because I believe our schools must remain focused on students and learning without distraction, I am resigning as Superintendent of LAUSD effective today, June 21, 2026.”

Within hours, the school board responded.

“The Board remains steadfast in its commitment to ensuring stability, continuity, and continued progress through strong leadership,” the statement said. “Our focus remains unchanged: providing every student with a high-quality education, supporting our dedicated workforce, and maintaining the trust of the communities we serve.”

The statement confirmed that veteran administrator Andres Chait will continue as acting superintendent “until a permanent decision is made.”

It's not clear whether Carvalho's departure comes [See Carvalho, A5]

Starmer exiting as support crumbles

U.K. prime minister's credibility was felled by repeated missteps, one linked to Epstein.

By Jill Lawless and Pan Pylas

LONDON — Dutiful rather than dynamic, Keir Starmer was elected Britain's prime minister to be a safe pair of hands who would end years of political chaos under the Conservatives.

Less than two years later, his term is ending after missteps, party infighting and one colossal error of judgment that indirectly ensnared him in the scandals surrounding Jeffrey Epstein, a man he had never met and in whose sexual crimes he was not complicit.

On Monday, Starmer said in an emotional statement that he was stepping down as leader of the governing Labor Party, though he will remain caretaker prime minister until a new Labor leader is chosen in the coming weeks.

“The question my party is asking now is whether I am best placed to lead us into the next general election,” he said. “I have heard the answer of my parliamentary party to that question, and I accept that answer with good grace.”

Starmer's selling point was “no more soap opera politics,” said Rob Ford, a political science professor at the University of Manchester. Instead, Ford said, his government was “the antithesis of what he said he was going to be about, and it's very hard to survive that.”

A trouncing for Labor in a midterm set of local and regional elections on May 7 proved the final straw. It triggered a series of government resignations and challenges that look set to sweep [See Starmer, A3]

CARLIN STIEHL For The Times

D IS FOR DUALITY

The art and architecture of Metro's three new stations along Wilshire Boulevard tell a tale of two transit cities. Review, ENTERTAINMENT, E1

Sorry, Dad, I'll ask the computer

Many children are turning to artificial intelligence before adults for help, study finds. LEARNING, A8

Weather

Mostly sunny. L.A. Basin: 80/61. B6

Markets A11
Opinion Voices A12

High court rules in LAPD case

Justices reject a bid to block suit over officer's killing of knife-wielding man. CALIFORNIA, B1

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

World Cup fever grips Pacific Northwest

By Kevin Baxter

SEATTLE — Jaysen Dickinson flew to Seattle from Vermont to cross an item off his lengthy bucket list.

“To see the World Cup and the U.S. play in the World Cup,” he said.

Kim Fletcher and her 17-year-old son, Kelan, caught a 5 a.m. flight from Sacramento last week for the same reason.

“It's a must-do right now,” she said.

They weren't alone. Tens of thousands of people poured into Seattle on Fri-

LINDSEY WASSON Associated Press

U.S. and Australia fans greet each other Friday en route to the stadium for the teams' game in Seattle.

day morning for the U.S. team's group-stage game with Australia, turning the Emerald City into a sea of red, white and blue. Some had tickets, most did not.

But who needed a ticket? More than 66,000 people filled Lumen Field in Seattle's SoDo district, but thousands more simply stood in the streets surrounding the stadium to soak up the energy.

“It's electric,” said Fletcher, whose son wore an American flag as a cape beneath a tricorned colonial hat. Another man was dressed in overalls in star-

[See Fans, A5]