

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

SATURDAY, MARCH 15, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Fish behavior during river dyeing studied

2024 research shows none of tagged fish rushed toward shelter

By Adriana Pérez
Chicago Tribune

Every year as part of the city’s St. Patrick’s Day celebrations, thousands of onlookers clad in green cheer on a boat crew sprinkling orange powder into the Chicago

River to turn it a festive shade. But with the federal government considering sweeping rollbacks to environmental protections, this Saturday many may wonder: How will the bright green water affect the underwater denizens? Last year, an extensive scientific study of fish behavior in the Chicago River system led by researchers from the Shedd Aquarium, Purdue University and the Illinois-Indiana Sea Grant offered a clue. In mid-March, as researchers studied aquatic activity they found a handful of the over 80 fish they were tracking were in the main branch downtown. On the day of the 2024 St. Patrick’s parade, none of the tagged fish rushed to find shelter from their suddenly green surroundings. “(It) was the first time that we could actually track how individ-

Turn to Dye, Page 4

Workers dye the Chicago River green on March 11, 2017, ahead of St. Patrick’s Day. JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Democrats lash out in budget battle

Schumer takes heat as Senate OKs bill to avert federal shutdown

By Stephen Groves, Matt Brown and Steve Peoples
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Democratic Party was fracturing Friday as a torrent of frustration and anger was unleashed at Senate Democrats, led by Sen. Chuck Schumer, who faced what they saw as an awful choice: shut the government down or consent to a Republican funding bill that allows President Donald Trump to continue slashing the federal government. After Schumer announced Thursday that he would reluctantly support the bill, he bore the brunt of that anger, including a protest at his office, calls from progressives that he be primaried in 2028 and suggestions that the Democratic Party would soon be looking for new leaders. The Senate passed the six-month spending bill Friday hours before a government shutdown, sending it to Trump to be signed into law. The vote was 54-46. Democrats voiced frustration that Republicans went ahead with a measure they said included little input from them, and one they viewed as shortchanging key priorities such as health care and housing assistance. But in the end, some of them viewed a shutdown as a worse outcome and supported Schumer’s effort to allow the bill to come to a final vote. In a rare move earlier Friday, the House Democratic leadership, which essentially held the line against the bill in their chamber, issued a scathing rejoinder, warning against caving to Trump, billionaire Elon Musk and the Republican agenda marching forward in Congress. “House Democrats will not be complicit,” House Minority Leader Hakeem Jeffries, House Democratic Whip Katherine Clark and House Democratic Caucus Chair

Turn to Budget, Page 4

Cubs outfielder Seiya Suzuki, center, walks back to the field after greeting his parents in the stands during a team workout in preparation for the Tokyo Series against the Dodgers at the Tokyo Dome on Friday. JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

From tuna cutters to samurai warriors

Imanaga, Suzuki host welcome party for Cubs in Tokyo

By Meghan Montemurro
Chicago Tribune

TOKYO — Seiya Suzuki was too young and not yet into baseball when the Chicago Cubs last played at the Tokyo Dome 25 years ago. But the memory of being in the ballpark in 2004 and watching Japanese great Hideki Matsui slug a home run for the New York Yankees still resonates with the 30-year-old Suzuki. He understands the impact the Cubs’ two-game series against the Los Angeles Dodgers could have on the next generation of baseball-loving kids in Japan.

“I feel like if the kids can watch it and they can see that we’re all playing baseball having fun, and if we can leave an impression like that, that’d be great,” Suzuki said through interpreter Edwin Stanberry. All eyes were on Suzuki and Shota Imanaga during Friday’s workout at the Tokyo Dome in front of an estimated 10,000 fans. The Cubs’ Japanese stars held a welcome party for their teammates, coaches and staff Thursday night at the Kanda Myojin Shrine. “It makes me very happy seeing my

Turn to Cubs, Page 2

“This is a once-in-a-lifetime trip, so I feel like you’ve got to dive into everything in the culture. You can just see how proud they are of showcasing their country and where they’re from.”

— Cubs infielder Justin Turner

Slain boy’s family sues over inmate release

The family of an 11-year-old boy fatally stabbed by the ex-boyfriend of the child’s mother has sued the Illinois Prisoner Review Board, alleging the panel was negligent when it released the man from prison. Chicagoland, Page 3

Damaged banners down for season

The banners commemorating the Bulls’ six NBA championships will not be displayed at the United Center for the rest of the season due to “minor damage” after a concert. Chicago Sports

‘Family navigators’ seek to reduce obstacles

Workers aim to boost support for families, youth in juvenile courts

By Caroline Kubzansky
Chicago Tribune

People often arrive at juvenile court with their guard up. Danielle Moore and Denise Gonzalez-Avila can understand why. As “family navigators” based out of the Cook County Juvenile Center, Moore, 26, and Gonzalez-Avila, 41, meet waves of parents and loved ones of minors charged with crimes in the difficult moments just before or after a child’s first court appearance. The pair works mainly with families whose children are awaiting trial or sentenced to probation or supervision. They can connect with families in part because of their own history with the juvenile court system: Moore was

Turn to Navigators, Page 4

Danielle Moore, 26, left, and Denise Gonzalez-Avila, 41, are family navigators with Cook County Juvenile Court who meet with the parents and loved ones of minors charged with crimes. AUDREY RICHARDSON/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

