

NOAH BERGER Associated Press

PRESIDENT Trump has called for Alcatraz prison, now a historical site and tourist attraction, to again be used to house criminals.

What to expect as Real ID deadline arrives

Officials say travelers can still fly without it — for now. Either way, prepare for delays.

By KAREN GARCIA

After nearly two decades of delays and warnings, implementation of the federal government's Real ID program is set to begin Wednesday at airports around the nation amid questions about how the change will affect air travel.

The requirement that travelers present a Real ID card as well as regular identifications is one of the biggest changes to airport security, but officials said Tuesday that the rollout will be gradual. Travelers without a Real ID generally will be able to board flights but should expect additional questioning.

Travelers without a Real ID or a Transportation Security Administration-acceptable form of identification "may be diverted to a different line" at TSA checkpoints, Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem said Tuesday.

"We will make sure that it is as seamless as possible and that travelers will get to stay on their intended itinerary," Noem said. "What will happen tomorrow is folks will come through the line, and [they] will issue their ID and show it. If it's not compliant, they may be diverted to a different line, have an extra step, but people will be allowed to fly."

John Breyault, vice president for the National Consumers League, warned travelers to expect that a high number of people will be diverted for additional screening. How that will affect wait times will depend on how many TSA officers will be assigned to perform the additional screening, he said.

Currently, 81% of travelers have the Real ID, according to [See ID, A9]

Reopen Alcatraz? Tourists look around and ask: 'Why?'

The exhibits on Alcatraz Island, the infamous federal prison that decades ago was shuttered and preserved as a national park site and tourist attraction, invite visitors to imagine what it was like to be a guard or an inmate confined to the lonesome, foggy rock in the middle of San Francisco Bay.

But on Monday, a day after President Trump posted on social media that he wants to reopen the nearly century-old prison as a "substantially enlarged and rebuilt ALCATRAZ, to house America's most ruthless and violent Offenders," many tourists were imagining a very different role: what it would be like to be the construction manager who might actually have to figure out how to make that happen.

"I'm all for what [Trump] is doing,

'This doesn't make sense,' a visitor says of Trump's proposal to revive the decaying site

By Jessica Garrison and Connor Sheets
REPORTING FROM ALCATRAZ ISLAND, CALIF.

but this doesn't make sense," said Beverly Klir, 63, an ardent Trump supporter who was visiting from Chicago. "I believe Gitmo [the prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba] may be better. That's where they all belong. They don't belong here."

She and her husband were standing amid a riot of pink flowers on the island's craggy bluffs, looking out at the Golden Gate Bridge as a pair of Canada geese and three fuzzy goslings waddled by. Behind them loomed the prison, its fortress-like facade menacing in appearance, but also a testament to age and weather, with crumbling stucco, deteriorated masonry and leaking joints.

Higher up on the island, outside the three-story [See Alcatraz, A12]

FRANCINE ORR Los Angeles Times

THREE OF the five U.S. counties with the greatest proportion of women in their 40s having children are in Northern California. Los Angeles landed in 15th place.

Bay Area sees older moms

When it comes to delaying motherhood to pursue other life aspirations, the region leads the nation

By CLARA HARTER

When it comes to delaying motherhood to pursue careers and other life aspirations, Bay Area women are leading the nation.

This region is home to the greatest share of women having children at 40 and older — a trend that experts chalk up to a combination of economic opportunity, progressive social norms and access to reproductive technology.

Three of the five U.S. counties with the greatest proportion of women having children in their 40s are in Northern California, according to data recently released from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and reported first by the San Francisco Chronicle.

At the top of the list is Marin County, where 11.4% of women who gave birth in 2023 were at least 40 years old. San Francisco came in second place with 10.9%, while San Mateo County ranked fifth with 8.7%.

Los Angeles landed in 15th place at 7.3%. The list includes all counties in the United States with at least 100,000 residents.

Dr. Mary Hinckley, IVF medical director at the Reproductive Science Center of the Bay Area, said she was [See Mothers, A12]

ENERGY STAR MAY GO DARK IN NEW SHAKE-UP

The popular program that rates appliances is on hit list, along with climate change offices.

By MICHAEL WILNER

WASHINGTON — A proposal by the Trump administration to reorganize the Environmental Protection Agency targets divisions that house its climate change offices as well as Energy Star, a widely popular program designed to help lower energy costs for American households.

A chart of the proposed reorganization reviewed by The Times on Tuesday showed plans for vast changes to the Office of Air and Radiation, where the programs are currently held, among several other divisions. "EPA is delivering organizational improvements to the personnel structure that will directly benefit the American people and better advance the agency's core mission, while Powering the Great American Comeback," the agency said.

Energy Star was at risk during the first Trump administration, when the EPA last faced an exodus of scientific talent, but ultimately survived. The program sets energy efficiency guidelines for the manufacturers of household products such as refrigerators, heat pumps and dishwashers, which then display the program's logo if they meet its standards.

Earlier Tuesday, CNN and the Washington Post reported that the proposed [See Energy Star, A9]

L.A. County declares hepatitis A outbreak

Health officials raise alarm over number of cases and who is becoming infected.

By RONG-GONG LIN II

Los Angeles County has declared a communitywide outbreak of hepatitis A, a highly contagious viral disease that can lead to lasting liver damage or even death.

Although cases of hepatitis A are nothing new in the region, health officials are expressing alarm at the prevalence of the disease and who is becoming infected.

Last year's total of 136 confirmed cases was the highest in the county in at least a decade, officials say, and more than double the number seen in 2023. Case counts have continued to climb throughout the early part of this year.

Seven deaths have been linked to the 13-month-old outbreak.

Historically, hepatitis A infections in L.A. County largely have been identified in homeless people, as limited access to toilets and handwashing facilities can help the disease spread more easily, county health officials say. But this year, most infections have been reported among people who aren't homeless, and who haven't recently traveled or used illicit drugs, which are [See Outbreak, A7]

Supreme Court OKs trans troops ban
Move paves way for White House to remove thousands of active-duty service members. NATION, A6

Californians ding Newsom in poll
Voters say he's more devoted to presidential ambitions than to the state. CALIFORNIA, B1

Weather
Clouds to sunshine. L.A. Basin: 71/56. B6

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

NEA cuts hit local arts groups
L.A. organizations rush to fill funding gaps after grants are rescinded. ENTERTAINMENT, E1

Printed with soy inks on partially recycled paper.

7 85944 00200 5

Every story. Every section. Every feature.
Subscribers get unlimited app access. Download now.

