

LEBANESE SOLDIERS guard the site of a strike by Israel that targeted Hezbollah in Beirut on Wednesday.

CHRIS McGRATH Getty Images

LAPD RECORDS LEAKED IN DATA HACK

Files on personnel and internal inquiries are exposed in breach of city attorney’s office.

BY LIBOR JANY AND RICHARD WINTON

A trove of sensitive Los Angeles police records, including officer personnel files and documents from internal affairs investigations, are among the materials seized by hackers in a breach last month involving the L.A. city attorney’s office.

The leak involves 337,000 files, including some of the LAPD’s most closely guarded records. The documents posted online include the disciplinary histories of officers and investigations into complaints against them, materials that are typically sealed from public view under state law.

The massive hack sent shudders through the department. Officials have sought to downplay the extent of the disclosure, but activists who have long pushed for more transparency around acts of officer misconduct quickly put a spotlight on sensitive files they were able to access.

After The Times published an article Tuesday about the hack, the Los Angeles Police Department issued a statement that said “unauthorized individuals had gained access to a digital storage system,” enabling them to obtain “discovery documents from previously adjudicated or settled LAPD civil litigation cases.”

The department noted [See Breach, A7]

Excitement over LA28 turns to sticker shock

Southland residents seeking Olympic tickets face error messages, a dwindling supply, high prices

By Suhauna Hussain and Thuc Nhi Nguyen

Andie Pangan did not even conceive of the possibility she would fail to snag tickets for tennis or climbing events at the 2028 Olympics in Los Angeles.

She has been watching tennis since she was young and desperately wanted tickets for a chance to see Filipina breakout star Alexandra Eala, who she hopes will qualify and be a trailblazer for the Philippines in the Olympics.

But when she logged on to the website at 10 a.m. Monday, the start of her ticket-buying time slot, all the events she had even remotely wanted were sold out, unavailable or well out of her price range, at more than $1,000.

“I was shocked. Even climbing was all gone,” said Pangan, who lives 10 minutes from Carson Stadium, which will serve as an Olympic venue. “I never really thought I would come out of this presale without getting anything.”

In a city filled with excitement about hosting the 2028 Games, the dream has collided with sticker shock as tickets finally went on sale.

Typically, tickets that cost hundreds or thousands of dollars are reserved for seats at half court, the 50-yard line or a concert’s front row.

Customers were shocked to find that tickets for LA28, which officials billed as “affordable” for locals, could cost a small fortune. Tickets for a single seat at the opening ceremony were costing between $329 and $5,519, and the cheaper tickets were selling quickly. Some were able to buy cheap $28 tickets for desired events such as the women’s soccer semifinals, but others saw comparable prices only for preliminary events and less popular sports such as badminton and judo.

To add to the frustration, some logging on during their time slots last week were booted off and routed to a webpage showing an “Access [See Tickets, A7]

Paramount Skydance exec steps down amid legal battle

At the helm for only 8 months, Jeff Shell resigns to focus on his skirmish with gambler.

BY MEG JAMES

Jeff Shell agreed to step down as president of Paramount Skydance after becoming entangled in a legal battle with a controversial Las Vegas gambler and self-styled “fixer.”

Paramount announced Shell’s departure Wednesday after the two sides negotiated an amicable resolution to the drama. Paramount said its external review into Shell’s conduct, initiated by Paramount’s board of directors, found no violation of securities laws.

Shell also resigned as a Paramount board member to focus on his legal skirmish, the company said.

His departure comes after just eight months on the job.

Paramount Skydance “is grateful for Mr. Shell’s many contributions and to have relied on him as a valued advisor,” the company said in its statement.

The veteran entertainment executive officially joined the media company with David Ellison’s takeover in August, though he had been a key member of Ellison’s team for nearly two years as the group worked to assemble the pieces of the tech scion’s growing empire. Ellison’s Skydance Media acquired Paramount and then pulled off a stunning $13-billion deal to buy Warner Bros. Discovery in late February.

Shell brought substantial experience running a media company to Ellison’s inner circle, a group that included former investment bankers and others who haven’t run a large-scale enterprise. But his role within the company long felt awkward because key division managers, including the heads of CBS, the Paramount movie studio and the company’s streaming businesses, reported to [See Shell, A11]

Ceasefire deal with Iran frays as attacks continue

Tehran wants Israeli strikes on Hezbollah to end. Terms exclude Lebanon, Trump says.

BY ANA CEBALLOS, GAVIN J. QUINTON AND JUSTINE MCDANIEL

WASHINGTON — A day after the United States and Iran agreed to a two-week ceasefire, the truce showed signs of strain Wednesday as Iranian leaders accused Americans of violating the agreement and reports emerged that Tehran had moved to restrict traffic through the Strait of Hormuz.

The developments tested President Trump’s ability to parlay a fragile pause in fighting into a lasting peace deal with a country he has spent weeks threatening to destroy, and raised questions about whether the Trump administration had the diplomatic leverage to hold the deal together.

The White House sought to project confidence about the ceasefire, but the fragile deal grew shakier after Israel carried out its largest attack against Hezbollah in Lebanon since the conflict began. Iran said the strikes by the U.S. ally amounted to a breach of the ceasefire terms, even as Trump and Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu maintained that Lebanon was not subject to the agreement.

“The big issue seems to be that the two sides can’t agree on what the agreement is,” said Michael Rubin, an expert on Iran at the American Enterprise Institute. At best, he said, the two sides had secured a “tactical pause.”

Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi said the United States must choose between a ceasefire or “continued war via Israel.

“It cannot have both,” Araghchi wrote on X. “The world sees the massacres in Lebanon. The ball is in the U.S. court, and the world is watching whether it will act on its commitments.”

Whether Iran will draw a red line over Lebanon could become a key question. The Wednesday back-and-forth represented “threshold-testing” of Iran and whether it will be willing to reengage [See Iran, A4]

Israel to continue hitting Hezbollah

Airstrikes target the group even after Pakistan said Iran truce covers Lebanon. WORLD, A2

ANALYSIS

After U.S. retreat, Tehran has edge

Trump’s withdrawal of threat to escalate fight has only emboldened the Islamic Republic.

BY MICHAEL WILNER

WASHINGTON — Morning broke in the Middle East on Wednesday with a wave of attacks by Iran. Air defenses in Kuwait were overwhelmed. Three dozen drones and 17 ballistic missiles were shot down over the United Arab Emirates. The most important oil pipeline in Saudi Arabia suffered a hit. Sirens flared in Tel Aviv, and a devastating drumbeat of Israeli strikes targeting Iran’s allies in Lebanon killed scores in Beirut.

A day after President Trump hailed a ceasefire in his war with the Islamic Republic, reversing course on his threat to escalate, the only country spared from attack appeared to be Iran itself.

The “fragile truce,” as Vice President JD Vance called it, began with a calculated show of force from an Iran militarily weakened by six weeks of U.S.-Israeli strikes, yet strategically positioned to press for sweeping concessions from an American president eager to end the war.

The president’s main conditions for a truce were the reopening of the Strait of Hormuz and, through negotiations, a definitive end to Iran’s nuclear work. But Tehran offered no sign of relenting on its enrichment program, and by Wednesday afternoon, had warned that tanker traffic would halt through the strait until Israel paused its attacks in Lebanon.

It was the clearest demonstration yet of an emboldened Iran using the strait — treated for decades as an open international waterway — as a bargaining tool, threatening its closure over any number of demands, or else implementing a toll system as reparations for its [See Analysis, A4]

Truckers grapple with record diesel prices

BY NILESH CHRISTOPHER

Record diesel prices are crushing California’s truckers, forcing them to adjust to avoid losses as they grapple with the most expensive pump prices in the country.

Greg Dubuque’s 40 drivers are in a constant diesel-devouring loop. Their big rigs pick up loads of electronics, office furniture and other goods in and around Los Angeles.

They drive close to 1,000 miles through the Mojave Desert and over the Rocky Mountains to Denver. They bring back containers full of everything from pinto beans to home remodeling materials.

GINA FERAZZI Los Angeles Times

GREG DUBUQUE, a third-generation trucker who manages 40 drivers, is feeling the pain of fuel prices.

One tank of gas for his vehicles cost $600 a couple of months ago. Today it costs $1,000. That’s a record high and more than 35% above the country’s average.

“California sets itself apart from the rest of the country when it comes to pricing,” said Dubuque, a third-generation trucker and general manager of Liberty Linehaul West. “Now it’s really out of control.”

The average price of a gallon of diesel in California got close to $7.75 this week, up 50% from a month ago, according to the American Automobile Assn. The national average of diesel is closer to $5.65 at recent peaks.

The trucking industry [See Truckers, A11]

Steve Moore Archives

DODGERS GREAT DIES

Davey Lopes, a star base stealer, second baseman and leadoff man, was part of four Dodgers World Series teams and one winner. SPORTS, B10

Prison time for ‘ketamine queen’

A woman who provided the drugs that killed actor Matthew Perry is sentenced to 15 years. CALIFORNIA, B1

Weather
Partly sunny.
L.A. Basin: 77/58. B6

Markets A10
Opinion Voices A12

Secret warrants in ballot inquiry

A judge unseals the documents in Sheriff Chad Bianco’s election inquiry. CALIFORNIA, B1

For the latest news, go to latimes.com.

