The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, OCTOBER 26, 2026

Facing frustrated voters, with diverging messages

Minogue talks of jobs moving; Healey focuses on Trump

By Chris Van Buskirk and Anjali Huynh
GLOBE STAFF

SHIRLEY — The Republican nominee for governor, Michael Minogue, brought his campaign to this exurban community to probe for a soft spot in the armor of his opponent, Democrat Maura Healey.

Perhaps best known for the prison it houses — and the Shaker village it once did — Shirley is among those communities left reeling after the nearby Nashoba Valley Medical Center shuttered amid the collapse of Steward Health Care. Its closure left a yawning gap in medical care, residents say, and, for Healey's challenger, a potential rich vein of frustration to tap in a part of the state more purple than solid blue.

Steward's collapse indeed left many people to share the blame, including its former chief executive. Tucked inside this town's American Legion hall on a recent Friday, Minogue naturally pointed his finger toward another. "And that person," he said, "is [then] Attorney General Maura Healey."

The hundred or so people who showed up liked

GOVERNOR CAMPAIGN, Page A6

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF

MELECK ELDAHSHOURY FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Governor Maura Healey met customers as she campaigned at Bettina's Bakery in Newton on Saturday. Her opponent, Michael Minogue, spoke in Shirley earlier this month.

DEBEE TLUMACKI FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Above, Taite Panton, who received care through the MGB program. Below, Kristin and Justine Ferrone wore PANDAS bracelets.

A mysterious condition, few treatments, and soon, a closure

Families reel as MGB moves to shutter PANS/PANDAS program

SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

By Allyson Chiu
GLOBE STAFF

Taite Panton couldn't stop thinking about the other children. He had never met them, but he knew their story.

More than a decade ago, Panton, then 5 years old, transformed seemingly overnight from an active and outgoing boy into a child who couldn't be away from his parents without experiencing crippling anxiety. He had extreme meltdowns. At times, he asked aloud why he was alive.

Panton and his family didn't know it then, but he was showing textbook symptoms of a condition called PANDAS, pediatric autoimmune neuropsychiatric disorder associated with streptococcus. Children with the condition develop sudden, debilitating psychiatric symptoms, often after common infections like strep throat. The intense anxiety, tics, and

MGB PROGRAM, Page A7

Ohio serves as litmus test for Ramaswamy's political future

Candidate's momentum stalls after disastrous ad

By Julian E.J. Sorapuru
GLOBE STAFF

CIRCLEVILLE, Ohio — Cheese curds, "elephant ears," and "taco in a bag" were all on sale at the Circleville Pumpkin Show. Flanking the food trucks were carnival rides, admission as low as $2 a pop. Pumpkins and gourds of all shapes and sizes — the largest weighing well over a ton — were also up for grabs.

Just a few short blocks from the festivities — beyond the sounds of shrieking children and scent of pumpkin spice — Vivek Ramaswamy pitched himself to a captive audience.

Perched atop the back porch of a baby blue house, the Republican gubernatorial candidate on Friday vowed "to make Ohio the most conservative state we've ever been, to make Ohio the state that is the envy and ambition of Texas and Florida." Cheers and whistles erupted from the crowd of about 150 people rallying for the state's midterm GOP ticket.

But just outside the friendly confines of the yard, several protesters held handwritten signs attached to sticks long enough to peek out over the top of the fence. They denounced Ramaswamy's most recent ad, which has landed him in hot water.

"Dear Vivek," one sign read, "so we are clear, child rape is not OK. #OhioDeservesBetter."

The ad in question — which has drawn widespread and bipartisan condemnation — features

RAMASWAMY, Page A6

RETURN FROM EXILE

VENTE VENEZUELA PRESS OFFICE VIA ASSOCIATED PRESS

Opposition leader María Corina Machado greeted supporters at a church in Barquisimeto, Venezuela, during her homecoming on Sunday. A3.

For sale: $45m Nantucket mansion, new with tags

A case study in buyer's remorse among ultra rich

BETH TEITELL

The rich are pushing it. Now it's not enough that they get to live in compounds. They get to NOT live in them, too.

This month, a listing dropped for a brand-new, custom-built, nine-bedroom, 13,500-square-foot, $45 million ... let's call it a cottage ... on Nantucket's Cliff Road. The listing was notable not just because $45 million would set a Massachusetts record for private home sales, but because the house, which is being sold furnished, wasn't built to be flipped.

Rather, the owners spent two years creating their "dream home" and then reportedly decided at the last minute that — you know what? — never mind!

It's not that they soured on Nantucket (thank God). As my colleague Claire Thornton reported, it's that they allegedly didn't want to move out of their other Nantucket home, which is located on a part of the island that's "a bit more rural," according to the listing agent, Greg McKechnie.

My first thought was, you've got to be kidding me. But once I got past the absurd notion that Cliff Road, with its trust-fund hedges, is suddenly some kind of urban sprawl, I realized that I can relate.

Foolhardy purchases happen to me, too, although in my case they typically and serially involve jeans, in which I come to

REAL ESTATE, Page A5

President Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva was re-elected, capping an evening of chaos at polling places across Brazil. A3.

Zoo New England is poised to win a $5 million earmark, but it won't cover much of the nonprofit's costs for essential capital projects. D1.

Lip balmy

Monday: Sunny, beautiful. High 67-72. Low 43-48.
Tuesday: Still sunny, cooler. High 50-55. Low 37-42.
Sunrise: 7:10 Sunset: 5:46
Obituaries, B6
Comics and Weather, D5-6

VOL. 310, NO. 118
*
Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 43117