

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, JANUARY 7, 2025

Trudeau vows to resign, citing ‘time for a reset’

Move comes amid anger in Canada over immigration, lingering effects of inflation

By Matina Stevis-Gridneff, Ian Austen, Vjosa Isai, and Thomas Fuller

NEW YORK TIMES

TORONTO — Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said Monday that he would step down in the coming months, bowing to an angry electorate at a time of uncertain economic prospects and political infighting.

The announcement, which came amid a gridlocked Parliament, left Canada in political flux just as the incoming Trump administration has vowed to impose punishing tariffs on Canadian imports.

“It’s time for a reset,” Trudeau told reporters outside his residence on a frigid morning in Ottawa, the capital. Trudeau said that he had suspended Parliament until March 24 and that he would stay on as Liberal Party leader and prime minister until his replacement had been chosen through a nationwide party election.

“I truly feel that removing the contention around my own continued leadership is an opportunity to bring the temperature down,” he said.

Trudeau, 53, who rose to power nearly a decade

TRUDEAU, Page A4

Kraft says he made Mayo head coach too early

Tells Patriot nation: ‘This whole situation is on me’

By Nicole Yang

GLOBE STAFF

FOXBOROUGH — Patriots owner Robert Kraft took the blame for the demise of Jerod Mayo, whom he fired Sunday after just one season as coach, lamenting that his decision to promote him was premature and vowing to hire someone who will bring the team back to championship glory.

“This whole situation is on me,” Kraft said Monday wearily during a press conference at Gillette Stadium. “I feel terrible for Jerod because I put him in an untenable situation. I know that he has all the tools as a head coach to be successful in this league. He just needed more time before taking the job.”

Kraft wouldn’t say specifically what he found “untenable” about the situation, but acknowledged he “felt guilty” for putting Mayo in such a position.

KRAFT, Page C2

JESSICA RINALDI/GLOBE STAFF

Patriots owner Robert Kraft vowed to hire someone who will bring the team back to championship glory.

Cold times’ sake

Tuesday: Windy, sunny. High: 27-32. Low: 17-22.

Wednesday: Breezy, bright. High: 27-32. Low: 16-21
Sunrise: 7:13 Sunset: 4:28
Comics and Weather, D5-6.
Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 7

Suggested retail price
$4.00

The US attorney for Massachusetts, Joshua S. Levy, said he will resign from his post on Jan. 17, several days before President-elect Donald Trump takes office. B1.

Three health insurance companies affiliated with United-Healthcare were ordered to pay $165 million in damages to consumers and the state after an earlier finding the companies engaged in deceptive sales practices. D1.

Healey orders shelter inspections

Calls for ‘full review’ after Revere hotel arrest; also seeks $425m more for system

By Matt Stout and Samantha J. Gross

GLOBE STAFF

Governor Maura Healey on Monday said she was ordering an inspection of all of Massachusetts emergency shelters and a “full review” of the state’s intake process after an undocumented immigrant was arrested on drug and weapons charges at a Revere hotel being operated as a temporary shelter for migrant and homeless families.

Healey’s order followed the arrest last month of Leonardo Andu-jar Sanchez of the Dominican Republic, who police said was living at the Quality Inn. Revere Police said they seized an assault rifle and roughly 10 pounds of fentanyl. Sanchez last week pleaded not guilty to nearly a dozen weapons and drug-related counts, including fentanyl trafficking.

The governor separately on Monday filed a bill seeking hundreds of millions of new dollars for the emergency shelter system, warning lawmakers that it is slated to run out of money Jan. 31.

Healey said Monday that it was “outrageous that this individual took advantage of our shelter system to engage in criminal activity.” A spokesperson for the state Executive Office of Housing and Livable Communities, which helps oversee the emergency shelter program, said Sanchez and family members had been living at the shelter site since Oct. 15.

“I’ve ordered an inspection of all shelter units, beginning with the Revere site, and a full review of our intake processes to determine any additional steps that we can take to prevent criminal activity in shelters,” Healey said in a statement released by her office.

Karissa Hand, a Healey spokesperson, said staff at each shelter will be conducting the inspections, “consistent with applicable shelter rules.” Officials will be looking for any “indications of criminal activity or anything that would raise significant health or safety concerns,” Hand said.

What the inspections could involve was not immediately clear. Danielle Ferrier, chief executive of Heading Home, one of the state’s shelter providers, said she has asked state officials to give her more details on “what we’re allowed to do” as far as performing a more thorough inspection beyond current

SHELTERS, Page A7

‘They get to applaud. We had to evacuate.’

REPRESENTATIVE JAKE AUCHINCLOSS, reflecting on the differences between the certification vote in 2021 and this year

SAUL LOEB/AFP VIA GETTY IMAGES

Vice President Kamala Harris and Speaker of the House Mike Johnson presided over a joint session of Congress on Monday to certify the results of the 2024 presidential election, exactly four years after supporters of Donald Trump stormed the Capitol.

‘Dignified and boring’ day on the Hill

Smooth certification of election stands in stark contrast to events of 2021

By Jim Puzzanghera

GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — The certification of Donald Trump’s 2024 presidential victory proceeded routinely Monday in the House chamber, a methodical announcement of each state’s electoral votes so unexciting that Representative Jake Auchincloss leaned back in his seat at one point and appeared to nod off.

“Dignified and boring,” the Newton Democrat said after the 30-minute exercise before a joint session of Congress presided over by

Vice President Kamala Harris. “Just like it should be.”

His last words hung in the air of one of the tunnels below the Capitol as he walked back to his office. On Monday, those tunnels were simply a way to avoid the cold and snow outside. Four years ago, when the certification of electoral votes was anything but dignified and boring, they were vital escape routes for lawmakers and their staffers after a violent mob of Donald Trump supporters attacked the Capitol in a failed attempt to overturn the 2020 election results.

Contrasts like that abounded Monday, as bracing as the frigid weather.

On Jan. 6, 2021, the Capitol grounds erupted with the sounds of screaming protestors, shattering glass, and violent clashes with overwhelmed police officers. On Monday, a snowstorm and a wide security perimeter meant the only sounds outside the Capitol were the rumble of snowplows and the scraping of shovels.

On Jan. 6, 2021, then-Vice President Mike Pence had to be rushed out of the building to

AUCHINCLOSS, Page A6

Knowing the math of daily living can add up

High school financial literacy classes seen as one way to tackle income disparity

By Esmy Jimenez

GLOBE STAFF

The financial literacy class at Westwood High School was buzzing on a Friday morning in December. Students working on group projects were examining the impact of inflation and researching the shifts in prices and wages.

One group found the median house in Massachusetts cost just under $14,000 in the 1960s. And a Toyota Corolla? Just $3,500.

In another corner of the room, four teen boys found the price of a dozen eggs in the 1980s was just 88 cents. Then came the real shock: The median family income then was $21,000.

Westwood is one of a few Massachusetts public schools offering this level of financial literacy programming. Over an academic quarter, students learn about taxes and managing debt and credit cards, and are often tasked with real-world problems like saving and balancing a budget.

There has been a push in recent years to introduce such courses to all high schools across the country in an effort to tackle income disparities and help people early on understand household finances. Financial literacy alone can’t fix a system in which some people’s wealth far exceeds others’ due to decades of systemic inequality, but experts said such

FINANCIAL LITERACY, Page A7

DAVID L. RYAN/GLOBE STAFF

Students in a financial literacy class at Westwood High School worked on a group project. The class has become a graduation requirement at the school.