

Ensnared within shutdown stalemate

For some, health subsidies serve as financial bedrock

By Jason Laughlin
GLOBE STAFF

For hundreds of thousands of people across Massachusetts, the fight at the center of the government shutdown carries frightening and immediate consequences: Can they continue to afford government-backed health insurance, or will they face skyrocketing premiums that could shatter their financial security?

Since 2021, expanded federal subsidies have made it possible for 337,000 people in Massachusetts to more easily afford health insurance through the Massachusetts Health Connector, the state's version of the Affordable Care Act marketplace.

Democrats want to make the subsidies, which are due to expire at the end of the year, permanent.

Republicans have proposed a one-year extension but say the government must be funded before they would negotiate further. The Congressional Budget Office reported last month that making the expansion permanent would add $350 billion to the national deficit through 2035 but would increase the number of Americans with health insurance by 3.8 million.

The lives of millions could be dramatically changed by what Congress does next. If the subsidies expire, some will be entirely excluded from buying coverage through the exchange. And the vast majority of the 24 million people enrolled in the Affordable Care Act marketplace will see some increase in their monthly premiums.

While it's not clear yet how

SUBSIDIES, Page A10

Cool dropout

Tuesday: Rain ends by night. High 54-59, low 50-55.

Wednesday: Sun returns. High 60-65, low 43-48.

High tide: 5:53, 6:08.

Sunrise: 6:56. Sunset: 6:03

Weather and comics, D5-6

Obituaries, C9

An Everett teen held in ICE detention in Virginia had a gun and knife when he was arrested, officials say. But his lawyer argues that was no reason to transfer him out of state. B1.

A 12-story building, now being proposed in Cambridge, could demonstrate how the area can boost affordable housing, with a few changes in regulations and without eschewing luxuries. D1.

Ukrainian officials argue they still have a strategy to end the war: Strike deep inside Russia with missiles and drones. A3.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 308, NO. 106

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

On this day, Palestinians and Israelis share one emotion: joy

An exchange of prisoners and hostages offers hope for a pathway toward peace

By David M. Halbfinger, Isabel Kershner, Aaron Boxerman, and Thomas Fuller
NEW YORK TIMES

After two years of mass carnage and destruction, Israel and Hamas took major steps Monday toward ending the war in the Gaza Strip, exchanging hostages for prisoners as President Trump arrived in the Middle East, basking in the adulation of world leaders who credited him for pushing through a plan for peace.

"This is the end of the age of terror and death," Trump said in an address to the Knesset, Israel's parliament, where he received a standing ovation and repeated, rapturous applause.

Trump proclaimed "the end of the war" in Gaza. And deploying a line presidents before him have reached for, only to be later disappointed, Trump declared a new era for the region.

"This is the historic dawn of a new Middle East," he said.

By the end of the day, Hamas had freed 20 living hostages and Israel had released some 2,000 Palestinian prisoners, part of the 20-point peace plan announced by the Trump administration after weeks of cajoling and courting major players in the Middle East, and with the mediation of Egypt, Qatar, and Turkey.

The guns and artillery in Gaza were silent Monday and the aerial bombings that have killed

RELEASE, Page A7

DAVID GUTTENFELDER/THE NEW YORK TIMES

Hostages Square in Tel Aviv has for many months been a gathering place for frustrated families and supporters. On Monday, the square erupted in cheers and tears as the release of the remaining living hostages was livestreamed.

Trump takes a victory lap, sidesteps what's next

Enthusiasm sweeps through summit, yet details remain scarce

By David E. Sanger
NEW YORK TIMES

JERUSALEM — President Trump landed in Israel on Monday morning minutes after the first of 20 hostages were released by Hamas, and spent the day basking in the applause of a country that credits him, more than Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, for joyous family reunions and a cease-fire after two years of war.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Trump seized on the moment to tell the Knesset, Israel's parliament, that this is "not only the end of a war, this is the end of the age of terror and death." Using a line that other presidents have reached for — and often been disappointed — he added: "This is the historic dawn of a new Middle East."

He then traveled to Egypt, where dozens of world leaders awaited his arrival for a "peace summit" that offered the pomp

DIPLOMACY, Page A5

JEHAD ALSHRAFI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Crowds surrounded the buses that carried freed Palestinian prisoners arriving outside Nasser Hospital in Khan Younis, in southern Gaza Strip.

Prisoners cheered

The release of nearly 2,000 Palestinian prisoners generated crowds in the West Bank and Gaza. A6.

At last, freedom

Israelis basked in a joyous moment of unifying national redemption after months of awaiting the return of the 20 remaining living hostages. A6.

Local hope

The day's events brought much joy to Boston-area activists, but for some, the grief endures. B1.

Retired Brown University professor among 3 awarded Nobel in economics

Howitt, partner modeled 'creative destruction' theory

By Alexa Gagosz
GLOBE STAFF

PROVIDENCE — Peter Howitt turned off his phone before going to bed Sunday night. Then in the darkness of early Monday morning, his wife's phone started ringing.

And ringing. And ringing again.

"It was a number from Sweden," Howitt recalled. "I said, 'I think you better answer.'"

For decades, Howitt has quietly

Peter Howitt

Philippe Aghion

shaped the way the world understands progress, developing theories about how innovation upends old ideas and industries, replaces them with new ones, and drives humanity forward. On Monday, that phone call provided the ultimate recognition for work that has become a cornerstone of modern economics: the Brown University professor emeritus was among three people awarded the Nobel Prize in Economic Sciences.

"It's hard to express how I feel right now," said Howitt, during a virtual press conference. "I'm just thrilled and still somewhat in

NOBEL, Page A10

WET WALK ON THE WILD SIDE

KEN MCGAGH FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

The fall nor'easter Monday turned Andrea Hadjikyriacou's umbrella into a nuisance as she headed to a conference in Boston's Seaport. Rain was heavy in Southeastern Mass. B2.