

Chicago Tribune

$4.00 | MONDAY, JUNE 29, 2026 | CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

Records: US deported man in 'error'

Chicago resident back home after being held for 8 months, sent to Venezuela; 'data quality' blamed

By Laura Rodríguez Presa
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

After spending nearly eight months in detention facilities across the United States, Jose Enrique Ojeda Duarte was finally deported to his native Venezuela in early April. He had been detained while on his way to work in Chicago in September, at the height of Operation Midway Blitz.

Almost a month after arriving in Venezuela, the U.S. government acknowledged that his deportation was an "error," according to court records reviewed by Tribune. The week before Father's Day, he arrived at O'Hare International Airport, reuniting with his partner and two young sons.

"It felt surreal. I couldn't grasp what was happening. It felt like a true miracle to see him walk inside our home again," said Leydimar Castillo, his partner.

Ojeda Duarte sat beside her on the black couch in the home they share with relatives on the South Side. His eyes shifted frequently toward the window. He startled at unexpected sounds as their children darted through the house, a puppy chasing after them. Though the effects of his harrowing ordeal still linger, he repeatedly expressed his gratitude for being home.

"I just want to get back to work," he said.

Ojeda Duarte's return is a rare admission of error by the Trump administration, which has taken a hard and often defiant approach to immigration enforcement. While a spokesperson for the U.S. Department of Homeland Security said Ojeda Duarte has "no legal status to be here" and blamed an "Obama-era judge" for his return, the government acknowledged in court records that Ojeda Duarte's removal from the United States was an "inadvertent error due to a data

Jose Enrique Ojeda Duarte holds his partner Leydimar Castillo's hand outside their home in Chicago. STACEY WESCOTT/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

See ERROR on Page A2

Participants ride the Trikone float celebrating the South Asian community during the 55th annual Chicago Pride Parade on Sunday in the Lakeview neighborhood. BRIAN CASSELLA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE PHOTOS

From fight to celebration

Crowds come out to revel in community, mark progress at Chicago Pride Parade

By Christiana Freitag and Evgenia Anastasakos
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

For 13 years, Brad Jankowiak, 58, and Jeremy Roystom, 47, have made it a tradition to go to Chicago's Pride Parade, preserving each year's glittering beads in frames at home.

But this year, they brought a piece of home with them: rainbow tie-dyed shirts belonging to Roystom's mother, who died last month.

"We wore them here so she's with us," Jankowiak said. "She's always been supportive of us."

She'd never been to Pride but was a strong supporter of their 20-year relationship.

"We brought her with us today so she can have a last, great time,"

Roystom said. "I wanted it to be her first Pride."

The East Lakeview couple were just two of thousands who came out to Chicago's annual Pride Parade Sunday, with spectators lining the streets to celebrate LGBTQ+ rights and visibility.

The Chicago parade hasn't always felt celebratory to Jankowiak, who comes from a "right-winged family" in Michigan. But he said what used to feel more like a time for protest now feels festive.

"It was more of a fight," he said. "Now we get to celebrate the fight is over."

However, this year's parade comes as LGBTQ+ advocates and lawmakers say rights are increasingly under threat from actions

Spectators enjoy the 55th Chicago Pride Parade, which featured 155 registered entries, including community organizations, local businesses, sports teams and government officials.

See PRIDE on Page A5

US, Iran attacks put talks at risk

Regime targets sites in Bahrain, Kuwait amid days of airstrikes

By Jon Gambrell
and Melanie Lidman
ASSOCIATED PRESS

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Iran again launched drone and missile attacks targeting Bahrain and Kuwait on Sunday following new U.S. airstrikes against the Islamic Republic, and threatened a "complete halt" in negotiations to end the war if Washington keeps attacking.

Efforts to reopen the Strait of Hormuz without Iran's oversight has sparked days of crossfire. A multinational maritime body overseen by the U.S. Navy said Saturday it would expand a route near Oman for inbound and outbound traffic, setting up a new flashpoint with Tehran.

Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi reiterated the claim Sunday that Tehran alone must govern the strait, the narrow mouth of the Persian Gulf that once carried a fifth of the world's oil and natural gas.

"Any attempt to establish new or separate arrangements from those currently being carried out by the Islamic Republic of Iran will only lead to further complications, delay the reopening of the Strait of Hormuz and increase the level of tension," Araghchi said.

The global community has long considered the strait an international waterway, despite its location in Iran and Oman's territorial waters. In recent days, Iran has twice attacked vessels going through a route on the Omani side during an evacuation effort backed by a United Nations agency.

The United States and Iran have been discussing the terms of an interim deal, including arrangements on the strait, the removal of

See IRAN on Page A9

INSIDE

Summer heat gets serious this week

Area residents will experience at least three days of dangerously hot conditions, officials warn. Chicagoland, A3

Rescuers seek quake survivors

Local and international rescue teams raced the clock to pull survivors from the rubble in Venezuela. Nation & World, B1

Local officials take reins to regulate data centers

As Illinois lawmakers stall, cities and counties step in to fill the void

By Jack O'Connor
CHICAGO TRIBUNE

SPRINGFIELD — In lieu of statewide regulations, a growing number of Illinois cities and counties are telling data centers to come back later or adhere to new regulations.

In Aurora, what began as a 180-day moratorium ended with city officials bringing the regulatory hammer down on data centers after many community members complained about excessive noise, utility bills and environmental concerns stemming from the city's existing facilities.

Nine months removed from the September moratorium, Aurora's data centers are having to play by new rules. Restrictions on where facilities can be built and updates to zoning rules to give the city approval power over new developments. Strict noise emission, water efficiency and energy efficiency standards for new data centers. Mandatory annual reporting of energy use, water use, noise levels and the storage of biometric data for all data centers, including those already built.

"My administration is about putting people and planet first, so it's making sure that the lights always get turned on for residents of Aurora, instead of seeing the power stripped away for data centers," Aurora Mayor John Laesch said. "It's good news that other municipalities and counties are taking action on this."

So far, at least six counties and nine cities in Illinois have approved data center moratoriums or regulations. Since May, Bloomington, Normal, Effingham, Bourbonnais, Carbondale, Logan County and Lake County have implemented data center moratoriums ranging from a six-month ban to a whole year. McLean County took a stronger approach in June, requiring existing data centers to document their electrical consumption and mandating data center proposals

See DATA on Page A5

SUBSCRIPTION

Visit myaccount.chicagotribune.com or call 312-546-7900 to sign up for a subscription. To place an ad, visit placeanad.chicagotribune.com.

WEATHER FORECAST

TODAY H: 94 L: 78
TUE. H: 96 L: 78
WED. H: 97 L: 78
Complete details on Page A12

INDEX

Almanac A9
Arts & Living B5
Comics B8-9
Crossword B9
Editorials A6
Horoscope B8
Nation & World B1
Obituaries A9
Television B7

179th year No. 180
© Chicago Tribune

