BMA'S WAR CHEST TO FUND DOCTORS' STRIKES

With first walkout due on Friday, union can spend millions wreaking NHS havoc MILITANT doctors have built up a £1 million war chest to 'bully' ministers into giving them another huge pay rise.

The British Medical Association boasts it is prepared for a 'long-term' fight with Health Secretary Wes Streeting if talks to prevent crippling strikes fail to reach a breakthrough.

And it says further reserves worth tens of millions can be tapped into to wreak chaos throughout the summer.

The 'industrial action reserve', worth £1 million at the start of this year, is 'ring-fenced' to fund a campaign for resident doctors to get pay hikes of 29 per cent, according to documents seen by the Mail.

But other reserves collectively
