

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

W E D N E S D A Y , J A N U A R Y 2 2 , 2 0 2 5

AGs sue Trump over citizenship order

Say attempt to keep some children born here from gaining birthright status is unconstitutional

By Anjali Huynh
and Samantha J. Gross
GLOBE STAFF

Attorney General Andrea Campbell on Tuesday filed her first lawsuit against the Trump administration, co-leading a group of attorneys general from 18 states in suing President Trump over his executive order seeking to end birthright citizenship.

The lawsuit, filed in Massachusetts, asserts Trump's executive action violates the 14th Amendment in an attempt to "abrogate this well-established and longstanding constitutional principle by executive fiat." They are seeking to stop the order while it undergoes an onslaught of legal challenges.

"This sham executive order is absolutely unlawful, full stop. There's a well-established process for changing the Constitution. It's not easy, it requires hard work," Campbell said Tuesday. "The president simply cannot bypass this process with an executive order. We will not allow the president to violate the law, nor allow him to punish innocent babies born on US soil."

The uproar over birthright citizenship came as the Trump administration sought to make good on numerous immigration-focused campaign promises, including declaring a national emergency at the southern border and planning raids in major cities. Tom Homan, Trump's border czar, indicated Monday to Fox Business that border policy could change as soon as Tuesday, saying, "Every ICE office is going to be out there enforcing the law starting tomorrow

CITIZENSHIP, Page A7

KEN MCGAGH FOR THE GLOBE/FILE

The son of Patriots owner Robert Kraft has never held elected office.

Josh Kraft to take on Wu

Reportedly will make it official next month

By Emma Platoff
and Niki Griswold
GLOBE STAFF

Josh Kraft, the longtime non-profit leader and younger son of billionaire New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft, has decided to challenge Michelle Wu in the mayoral race this year, according to two people who have spoken with him about his plans. He is eyeing a formal announcement in February, the people said.

A familiar presence in Boston's philanthropic circles, Kraft would, so far, be the first challenger to Wu, a progressive who just last week shattered another barrier in the city's history when she gave birth to her third child, Mira Wu Pewarski.

Kraft's expected announcement comes as the country's political winds are shifting. This week marked the second inauguration of Donald Trump, who is broadly reviled in Boston but has had ties to Robert Kraft.

KRAFT, Page A10

Harvard to use debated definition of antisemitism

Critics say it can stifle speech

By Hilary Burns
and Mike Damiano
GLOBE STAFF

A day after Donald Trump's second presidential inauguration, Harvard University said it would begin using a definition of antisemitism that the first Trump administration promoted and that critics say can lead to censorship of pro-Palestinian speech.

Harvard's announcement on Tuesday came as part of a settlement of two lawsuits filed by Jewish students and advocacy groups last year amid campus protests over the war in Gaza that followed the Oct. 7 Hamas attack on Israel. The protests engendered fierce debates from Harvard Yard to Congress over where to draw the line between criticism of Israel and speech that veers into antisemitism, and forced universities to grapple with how to strike the balance between protecting free expression and policing offensive or bigoted speech.

The definition, adopted by the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance as well as more than 40 nations but only a handful of American universities, says that certain kinds of criticism of Israel and Zionism can be antisemitic, such as asserting that "the existence of a State of Israel is a racist endeavor" or "drawing comparisons of

HARVARD, Page A10

GREGORY BULL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Migrants waited to be processed between two border walls separating Mexico and the United States after they crossed illegally Tuesday.

Pardons sting for those attacked on Jan. 6

By Luke Broadwater
NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — When inmates are released from federal prison, the Justice Department places a call to their victims, notifying them that the defendant who attacked them is now free. On Tuesday, the phones of US Capitol Police and D.C. police officers were buzzing nonstop.

For Aquilino A. Gonell, a former Capitol Police sergeant, the automated calls began Monday evening and continued into Tuesday morning after President Trump issued a sweeping legal reprieve to all of the nearly 1,600 defendants, including those convicted of violent crimes, in the Jan. 6, 2021, attack on the Capitol.

Between 7:03 a.m. and 9:37 a.m., Gonell received nine calls from the Justice Department about the release of inmates. Gonell, who was assaulted during the attack and retired because of the injuries he suffered, was as outraged and

JAN. 6, Page A6

Hegseth accused

A former sister-in-law details alleged abuse of his second wife. A5.

Not a landslide

Trump's claim of a mandate could wind up hurting him in the end. A6.

Homeland shakeup

Heads of the Transportation Security Administration and Coast Guard are fired. A2.

Report blocked

Justice Dept. can't release part of Jack Smith's probe. A7.

KAYLA BARTKOWSKI/GETTY IMAGES

Stewart Rhodes of the Oath Keepers militia was serving an 18-year term but was freed after his sentence was commuted.

Wind projects face a tough new reality

Federal government's pause could be permanent for some

By Sabrina Shankman
GLOBE STAFF

The finish line was right there. After three years of clearing regulatory hoops, SouthCoast Wind got its last major federal permit to build a wind farm off the coast of Martha's Vineyard on Friday, a parting gift from the Biden administration.

The problem for SouthCoast Wind, however, is it still needs several smaller approvals from the federal government before beginning construction on as many as 147 wind turbines that promise enough clean energy for 1 million homes in Massachusetts and Rhode Island by the end of the decade.

And then on Monday, the finish line no longer seemed so near, when newly sworn-in President Trump issued his day one executive order to pause federal approval of all offshore wind leases and permits.

Now, SouthCoast Wind — like so many other offshore wind projects up and down the East Coast — is fixed in place by uncertainty, stuck just shy of the green light.

More than a decade after Massachusetts leaders initiated a transition to clean energy that hinged on hundreds of turbines spinning off the coasts of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard, Trump's early actions have thrown that transition into turmoil. The potential costs, in terms of economic investment, jobs, and risk to the climate from the continued reliance on fossil fuels, are massive.

WIND, Page A7

Prosecutors dropped all charges against Ivan Cheung, the former State Street bank vice president accused of committing multiple rapes. B1.

Grocery stores are struggling with an egg shortage resulting from avian flu outbreaks and a snarled supply chain. B5.

A fire in a 12-story hotel killed at least 76 people at a ski resort in Turkey. A3.

Josh McDaniels is back with the Patriots for his third go as offensive coordinator. C1.

Always consistent, always low-key, Rudy's in Somerville's Teele Square shuts its doors after 43 years. G1.

DANIELLE PARHIZKARAN/GLOBE STAFF

THREEPEAT — Northeastern took its third straight Women's Beanpot title, shutting out Boston University, 4-0, on Tuesday night at TD Garden. C1.

Rink leader

Wednesday: Clear but cold. High 20-25. Low 15-20.

Thursday: Closer to normal. High 29-34. Low 17-22.

Sunrise: 7:06 Sunset: 4:45

Weather and Comics, G6-7. Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 307, NO. 22

Suggested retail price
$4.00

0 947725 4