

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2025

In Andover, local politics draw outside influence

Teachers union, GOP offer money, support in school panel race

By Matt Stout
GLOBE STAFF

ANDOVER — The ballot for Tuesday's town election here looks like many others: A town moderator is up for reelection. A smattering of unopposed incumbents are running.

But tucked at the bottom, there's a competitive campaign for School Committee that may well be forging a new front in Massachusetts politics.

The powerful Massachusetts Teachers Association poured thousands of dollars into that race, making it one of dozens of municipal votes the union is eying this year. The Massachusetts Republican Party, keen on growing its stable of elected

'You need to ask yourself, why do those groups care about our local elections?'

EMILY DICESARO, incumbent School Committee member officials, is helping back one of the same candidates as the teachers union. A super PAC — an entity more common in state and national politics — may be the race's top spender.

That growing influx of outside money and support is not only unusual for a municipal race but is a potential harbinger of what's to come across the state as groups, such as the MTA, expand their influence into what once were hyperlocal affairs.

"This is a logical extension of the great political and electoral work we've done," said Max Page, president of the 117,000-member MTA, which in recent years put tens of millions of dollars behind efforts to repeal the MCAS graduation requirement and create a surtax on the state's highest earners meant to boost education and transportation spending.

This spring alone, Page said, the MTA

ANDOVER, Page A10

Residents of South Coast communities have a rail link into Boston, for the first time in more than a half century. B1.

Police named a suspect, still at large, in the shooting deaths of two teens in Brockton over the weekend. B1.

Drug maker Biogen will consolidate its operations when it moves to its new Cambridge headquarters in 2028. D1.

To the Trump administration, it's an opportunity; to Greenland officials, the upcoming trip of US officials is nothing more than a geopolitical mess. A3.

Change our rays

Tuesday: Milder, with some sun.
High 51-56, low 35-40.

Wednesday: Showers once again.
High 43-48, low 30-35.

High tide: 8:18, 9:01.

Sunrise: 6:39. Sunset: 7:02.

Weather and comics, D5-6.

Obituaries, C9.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

VOL. 307, NO. 84

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

Raids raise questions, fears

Homan says operation targeted criminals; advocates say many others swept up

By Giulia McDonnell Nieto del Rio and Samantha J. Gross

GLOBE STAFF

In New Bedford, several workers were arrested by immigration authorities last week on their way to a construction site. In Fall River, a citizen from Puerto Rico said federal officials blocked her car until she had shown them three forms of identification.

And in Chelsea, a Salvadoran father of two with a work permit, no known criminal record, and a pending asylum case was taken into custody last Tuesday on his way to work. The man, who has been in the country for more than five years, is being held at a detention center in Plymouth.

Across Massachusetts, federal immigration agents conducted an intense six-day operation in what Immigration and Customs Enforcement said was a targeted effort "focusing on transnational organized crime, gangs, and egregious illegal alien offenders."

PHOTOS BY SUZANNE KREITER/GLOBE STAFF

Officers from ATF and Homeland Security Investigations detained a man last week in Chelsea.

To underscore that statement, President Trump's "border czar," Tom Homan, announced Monday in a post on X that he had flown to Boston to oversee the operation, during which federal agents arrested 370 people in Boston and surrounding areas. According to a statement from ICE officials, law enforcement seized about 44 kilograms of methamphetamines, 5 kilograms of fentanyl, 1.2 kilograms of cocaine, and three guns in the operation, which

ICE, Page A6

At La Colaborativa in Chelsea, Gladys Vega (left) consoled Carolina, 32, whose husband, Elmer, of El Salvador was arrested by ICE.

The puck stops here: Canada's leader taps into hockey heritage

By Jim Puzzanghera

GLOBE STAFF

When the puck formally dropped on Mark Carney's political career, it didn't take long for him to fire off his first hockey metaphor.

He had just been overwhelmingly elected Canada's Liberal Party leader, propelling him to take over as prime minister at a pivotal moment when his country's future — its economy and very existence as a sovereign nation — is under threat from President Trump. And midway through Carney's acceptance speech in early March, the low-key political newcomer had a uniquely Canadian warning for his more bombastic counterpart to the south.

"We didn't ask for this fight, but Canadians are always ready when someone else drops the gloves," Carney said on a stage in Ottawa

CARNEY, Page A7

Local lessons

Massachusetts school districts joined unions in suits seeking to halt the dismantling of the Department of Education. B2.

Wartime act debate

Appeals court judges appeared divided on the Trump administration's bid to use an 18th century law to deport Venezuelan migrants. A2.

In a group chat, Hegseth disclosed secret war plans

By Helene Cooper and Eric Schmitt

NEW YORK TIMES

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth disclosed war plans in an encrypted group chat that included a journalist two hours before American troops launched attacks against the Houthi militia in Yemen, the White House said Monday, confirming an account in the magazine The Atlantic.

The editor-in-chief of The Atlantic, Jeffrey Goldberg, wrote in an article published Monday that he was mistakenly added to the text chat on the commercial messaging app Signal by Michael Waltz, national security adviser.

It was an extraordinary breach of national security intelligence. Not only was the journalist inadvertently included in the group, but the conversation occurred outside the secure government channels that would normally be used for highly sensitive war planning.

Goldberg said he was able to follow the conversation among senior members of President Trump's national security team in the two days leading up to the strikes in Yemen. The group also included Vice President JD Vance and Secretary of State Marco Rubio, Goldberg wrote.

At 11:44 a.m. on March 15, Hegseth posted the "operational details of forthcoming strikes on Yemen, including information

WAR PLANS, Page A4

'Gen Silent' and the road to improve LGBTQ elder care

State efforts to train staff lack enforcement

By Kay Lazar

GLOBE STAFF

Dr. Barbara Herbert was anguished. The pioneering physician had been critically ill, in and out of rehabilitation facilities, nursing homes, and home health care in Greater Boston, as she fought chronic, severe asthma in the last months of her life.

But it was a different matter that drove her to call her wife, Jean McGuire, one night in 2022 from a nursing home. Her nurse aide disapproved of her homosexuality and, she said, had told her she had no clean underwear to change into that night because the aide didn't think her boxer-style underwear was appropriate.

"It was so intimate and painful," said McGuire, an outspoken former assistant state health secretary whose voice still falters when she describes the phone call. "The fact that we had to go through that when you are dealing with so much, it's so hard."

Nearly seven years ago, Massachusetts passed a first-in-the-nation law that requires nearly all state-funded or licensed providers of services to older adults to complete training on the rights and care of LGBTQ people. The law includes assisted living facilities, home health care, rehabilitation centers, and hospices. But it's an open question whether the rules have made a measurable difference.

No state agency compiles discrimination complaints in the hundreds of facilities. LGBTQ, Page A10

AURELIEN MORISSARD/ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

ON HOME ICE — Two-time US champion Amber Glenn leads a US team — perhaps the strongest in two decades — into the World Figure Skating Championships, held at the TD Garden this week. C1.