WHY CHINA SPY MUST BE NAMED

By Ryan Hooper

A CHINESE 'spy' who grew close to Prince Andrew must be unmasked by the courts, it was demanded last night.

The suspected operative knew the Duke of York for a decade, prompting major concerns about national security and Beijing's influence on the British Establishment.

The Mail can reveal that as well as royals and former PMs, the alleged agent also mixed with captains of industry. There are now calls for him to be identified publicly amid fears there may be others in high office who are unaware they have had dealings with a supposed spy.

He can currently only be referred to as H6, thanks to an anonymity ruling by an immigration court that banned him from Britain on the grounds of national security.

Yet, making a mockery of that order, the 50-year-old's name and picture is being used widely in Chinese and US news reports and on social media, in coverage seen by millions around the globe. The matter is due to be reconsidered by High Court judges as early as this week. Last
