

CTA DEAL A BLOW TO MAYORAL CLOUT

But Johnson, City Hall allies say legislative reforms are worthwhile price to pay to keep the trains running. Chicagoland, Page 7

WINNER OF 28 PULITZER PRIZES FOR EXCELLENCE IN JOURNALISM

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

In court: Bovino doubles down on Border Patrol's aggressive tactics as judge weighs restrictions on feds

Day care raid: Agents take worker from inside North Center facility, drawing outrage, fear for kids' safety

Use of force under fire

Federal officers use tear gas and smoke on members of the community and activists while they protest near the 3900 block of South Kedzie Avenue on Oct. 4 in Chicago. ARMANDO L. SANCHEZ/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Educator, child forced to take refuge in nearby car as feds enter preschool

By Laura Turbay and Gregory Royal Pratt
Chicago Tribune

A beloved day care worker at a Spanish-immersion preschool in Chicago was arrested by federal immigration agents Wednesday, sparking outrage among parents, elected officials and the surrounding community as agents in President Donald Trump's Operation Midway Blitz took the unprecedented step of entering the school itself.

In a video widely circulated online, the agents are seen pulling the screaming woman, a mother of two from Colombia, through the glass vestibule at the Rayito de Sol Spanish Immersion Early Learning Center in North Center, near Lane Tech College Prep High School. She is heard saying, "I have papers," in Spanish as agents pin her against the officers' car.

School officials said the woman, who cares for infants, had authorization to work in the day care and had undergone a background check. An agent did not present a warrant when he entered the building, the school's staff said.

"We were concerned about the safety of the children," a visibly shaken educator, Marisel Mari, told the Tribune moments after the arrest.

Department of Homeland Security spokeswoman Tricia

Turn to Day care, Page 2

Maria Guzman, a parent of two children enrolled at Rayito de Sol Spanish Immersion Early Learning Center in Chicago, stands beside U.S. Rep. Mike Quigley while talking about a teacher being detained by immigration enforcement officers earlier Wednesday. CHRIS SWEDA/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Judge is expected to issue ruling Thursday

By Jason Meisner
Chicago Tribune

Hours into his sworn deposition last week, Border Control Cmdr. Gregory Bovino was shown video of him tackling a protester at the Broadview immigration facility in September and asked point-blank: Did you apply any force here?

"No," answered Bovino in the videotaped testimony played in a federal courtroom Wednesday, explaining that all he saw was him making a lawful arrest. That's different, he said, from a "reportable use of force" like deploying tear gas or shooting someone or using "open-hand strikes."

Asked if force could be applied in the course of an arrest, Bovino seemed momentarily confused by the question.

"It's possible," he said. "In this case the use of force was against me."

The remarkable exchange was one highlight of a marathon day of testimony before U.S. District Judge Sara Ellis, who issued a temporary restraining order last month and is now deciding whether to put more long-term restrictions on the use of chemical agents on crowds and provide enhanced protections for protesters and media.

After more than eight hours of testimony and argument, Ellis suspended the hearing and said she would issue an oral ruling into the record at 10 a.m. Thursday, an hour and a half before her temporary restraining order is set to expire.

In addition to Bovino's video testimony, the judge on Thursday saw images of him tossing tear gas canisters in Little Village, heard his boss, Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem, tell agents to "go hard" against people who opposed law enforcement, and watched surveillance footage of a pastor being shot in the face with a pepper spray balls.

Ellis heard from more than a half dozen witnesses who say immigration agents pointed guns at citizens and threatened to arrest protesters who were doing

Turn to Court, Page 5

Judge blasts conditions at Broadview facility

A federal judge on Wednesday ordered feds to provide detainees enough food and water at facility where conditions do not "pass constitutional muster." Chicagoland, Page 3

Snelling: Feds using less tear gas after discussion

Chicago police Superintendent Larry Snelling on Wednesday said the use of tear gas by immigration agents has lessened after cops expressed concern. Chicagoland, Page 3

ELECTION 2026 US HOUSE

Preston's past Trump praise raising questions for Dem

By Jake Sheridan
Chicago Tribune

Democratic state Sen. Willie Preston is pitching himself as a fighter for working-class families and a product of South Side struggles, hoping that message will stand out in a crowded field vying for Illinois' 2nd Congressional District seat.

But as Preston campaigns on authenticity and lived experience in the race to represent the district that stretches from the South Side to Danville, his online past is beginning to command attention.

Preston

Just weeks before the 2020 election, Preston posted a series of Facebook messages praising President Donald Trump and ridiculing election rival Joe Biden and the Democratic Party. The posts, some laced with mild profanity, were written by Preston before he held public office as a Democrat in the state legislature.

"Go to hell Joe Biden! #TRUMP2020," Preston wrote

Turn to Preston, Page 7

ELECTION 2025 ANALYSIS

With decisive wins across US, Democrats show signs of life

By Lisa Lerer
The New York Times

With their election night triumphs Tuesday, Democrats showed that their demoralized party — which spent the past year mired in self-recriminations and soul-searching — can still accomplish the most important goal in politics.

They can win. And win big.

The decisive victories for governor in Virginia and New Jersey and mayor of New York City and a major ballot initiative in California — which is likely to yield as many as five House seats for Democrats next year — demonstrated crucial signs of life for a party that was soundly defeated in all seven presidential battleground states, lost control of the Senate and failed to win the House just a year ago.

The results showed a level of determination and energy among Democratic voters that was missing in that 2024 election. This time, their candidates were stronger, their campaigns focused intensely on affordability and an ardent desire to deal a blow to President Donald

Turn to Dems, Page 2

INSIDE García defends stepping down

U.S. Rep. Jesús "Chuy" García on Wednesday defended his decision to quietly drop his bid for a fifth term in Congress and essentially hand the post to his chief of staff, a move that undermines the Southwest Side progressive's legacy as a reformer and has opened him up to accusations of hypocrisy by borrowing from the old-school Chicago machine playbook he's long railed against.

The move has drawn criticism from opponents and some former allies.

Chicagoland, Page 3

