

How NPS put Trump orders into action

Database shows scope of effort to revise, remove information at parks

BY KARIN BRULLIARD AND BRADY DENNIS

At the Emmett Till and Mamie Till-Mobley National Monument in Mississippi, staff members asked the Trump administration to review an entire exhibit on the Black teen's brutal 1955 killing by White men and his mother's decision to publicize it — though the park's staff warned that its removal would leave the site "completely devoid of interpretation."

At Arches National Park in Utah, park managers wondered whether a sign about the damage that graffiti and invasive species leave on the iconic red rock landscape violates a Trump directive to focus solely on America's natural beauty.

And at Harpers Ferry National Historical Park in West Virginia, staff members have asked federal officials to decide whether a document that describes an abolitionist's murder by a mob might "denigrate the murderers."

These displays and materials are among several hundred that managers have flagged at hundreds of national park locations since last summer in response to administration orders to scrub sites of "partisan ideology," descriptions that "disparage" Americans, or materials that stray from a focus on the nation's "beauty, abundance, or grandeur." The submissions were compiled in an internal government database and reviewed by The Washington Post, which confirmed its authenticity

SEE PARKS ON A2

High court balances pot against gun rights

BY JULIAN MARK

When FBI agents raided Ali Hemani's Texas home in August 2022, they found a Glock 9mm handgun and 60 grams of marijuana. Hemani says he told the agents they could find the pot in a gutter drainpipe and acknowledged he used marijuana "about every other day."

Six months later, prosecutors charged Hemani with a single crime: being an "unlawful user" of a controlled substance in possession of a gun — though only as it related to his regular marijuana smoking.

Lower courts dismissed the case, saying the law violated Hemani's Second Amendment right to bear arms. The government appealed to the Supreme Court.

On Monday, justices weighed the constitutionality of Hemani's charge — under a section of the Gun Control Act of 1968. The law prohibits regular users of controlled substances from possessing firearms. (In 2024, a jury found President Joe Biden's son Hunter guilty of violating the same law.)

The issue before the court is whether the law meets a strict Second Amendment standard that any gun restriction must be consistent with the "Nation's historical tradition." But Monday's

SEE MARIJUANA ON A5

U.S. could send ground troops

JIM WATSON/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

President Donald Trump departs a Medal of Honor ceremony at the White House on Monday.

MAJID ASGARIPOUR/VIA REUTERS

Firefighters work following a U.S.-Israeli airstrike that hit a police station in Tehran on Monday.

HEIDI LEVINE/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Mourners attend a funeral for people killed in an Iranian missile strike Sunday in Beit Shemesh.

PENTAGON BRACES FOR MORE CASUALTIES

Hegseth doesn't rule out putting boots on the ground

BY TARA COPP, ALEX HORTON AND DAN LAMOTHE

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth on Monday would not rule out the possibility of sending American ground troops to Iran or articulate the Trump administration's exit strategy as the Pentagon attempts to secure a quick, decisive victory while limiting U.S. bloodshed.

Hegseth, joined by Joint Chiefs Chairman Gen. Dan Caine, delivered his first public remarks to reporters as U.S. and Israeli forces carried out a third day of attacks on Iran's military infrastructure and Iranian forces hit American bases throughout the Middle East.

Hegseth, who as an Army National Guard officer served during the Iraq War, struck a combative tone early on in the briefing, defending President Donald Trump's decision to authorize the operation against Iran, chastising the administration's critics and vowing that, unlike recent U.S. wars, this one would not be "endless."

"Our generation knows better," the defense secretary said in a prepared statement at the briefing's outset, "and so does this president."

But there are signs that the military's needs already are evolving and that the conflict could become more costly and drawn out than the president perhaps had anticipated.

Six U.S. service members have died as a result of Iranian counterstrikes, officials said, and three advanced aircraft have been lost. Trump told reporters at the White House later Monday that the U.S. military had projected that the operation could take four to five weeks but "we have the capability to go far longer than that."

Caine said additional personnel were being moved into the region on Monday to support the operation. He would not provide specifics except to say that some of the additional forces included "tactical aviation" units.

A person familiar with the military's plans, speaking like some others on the condition of anonymity because the matter is highly sensitive, said the Pentagon also was working to move more air defense assets into the region. The Army has been directed to send additional medical support and ammunition technicians to Europe, a defense official said.

Spokespeople for the general

SEE IRAN ON A12

Strikes on Iran spark accusations of bad-faith negotiations by U.S.

BY ADAM TAYLOR

The talks were not going well, but there were signs that they would continue. The top U.S. diplomat was due to travel to the Middle East on Monday and negotiating teams were due to meet again in Geneva for a fourth round of discussions later in the week.

"We'll see what happens. We're talking later," President Donald Trump told reporters Friday, adding that he was "not happy" with the way Iran was approaching negotiations over the fate of its nuclear program amid his repeated threats to attack unless his demands were met.

Hours later, U.S. and Israeli forces launched widespread strikes across Iran, killing much of the country's political and military leadership. The assault has sparked multiple rounds of retaliation from Iran and threatened to plunge the region into chaos.

Although U.S. officials say that the talks were in good faith, critics of the Trump administration call the abrupt shift to war duplicious, if not deceitful. Iranian Foreign Minister Abbas Araghchi, who had led the Iranian delegation, told ABC News on Sunday that the United States had "attacked us in the middle of negotiation."

The White House declined to comment for this article. The State Department did not respond to a request for comment.

Oman's foreign minister, who had been mediating the talks in Geneva, also appeared shocked at the abrupt turn away from diplomacy.

Badr Albusaidi had traveled to Washington on Friday in what he saw as a "last-ditch" effort to forestall war, according to two people familiar with his plans. The foreign minister had hoped to make his case directly with Trump and Secretary of State Marco Rubio, according to these people, who like some others spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss the matter with the news media.

He instead met with Vice President JD Vance as Trump and Rubio were already on their way to

SEE DIPLOMACY ON A11

Americans respond: The Post asked 1,000 people about the strikes. A9

Conflict widens: 'Regional spillover' starts as other countries are hit. A10

U.S. jets downed: A video appears to show the moment of the crash. A12

Solar power's role in AI, keeping utility bills low win over MAGA

BY EVAN HALPER

The X feed of right-wing firebrand and podcaster Katie Miller has all the signatures of an acolyte of President Donald Trump. She blasts out attacks on the "transing" of kids, taunts the mainstream media and lobs slurs designed to trigger the left.

But recently that Make America Great Again fire hose has also contained posts that seem off-brand for the former GOP official, whose spouse is Trump's domestic policy chief Stephen Miller.

"Solar energy is the energy of the future," Katie Miller posted recently. "Giant fusion reactor up there in the sky — we must rapidly expand solar to compete with China." Another of her posts suggested solar is more vital to the U.S. than coal power, contradicting White House messaging and policy.

A growing number of prominent Trump allies are promoting its benefits

Trump has been blunt about his distaste for solar panels, calling them a "blight" on the landscape, "very inefficient, and very ugly too" and — along with wind turbines — "THE SCAM OF THE CENTURY." His administration has blocked hundreds of projects from final approval as it prioritizes fossil fuels.

Yet Katie Miller is no outlier in her willingness to buck MAGA orthodoxy on energy from the sun.

A growing number of prominent Trump allies — including former House speaker Newt Gingrich, veteran strategist Kellyanne Conway and GOP pollster Tony Fabrizio — are promoting solar as electricity demand surges and energy affordability climbs the list of voter concerns.

Their clean energy advocacy may be having an impact, as the White House signals it is reconsidering power from the sun. The tone of Trump himself has even changed.

In an interview, Miller said solar is crucial to delivering on the right's energy and AI dominance agenda. "Look at what Australia did," she said. "Solar solved their rolling blackout issues. President Trump has prioritized lowering the cost of energy for the American people ... I am simply advocating that solar can and should be a driver of the solution."

Asked if she is getting paid for her advocacy, like some other MAGA heavyweights promoting solar, Miller would not comment. Regardless, these full-throated endorsements of a renewable energy source that has been much maligned by Trump and his advisers represents a departure from what had been a pillar of the

SEE SOLAR ON A7

IN THE NEWS

Inquiry launched Democrats probe how tech giants handle DHS requests for information about citizens who criticize the agency. A6

Clintons' depositions released The Republican-controlled House Oversight Committee puts out the closed-door testimony given as part of the Epstein investigation. A8

THE NATION
Sen. John Cornyn could lose his GOP Senate primary in Texas in a hotly contested race. A4
The Trump administration is abandoning its efforts to punish several large law firms. A5

THE WORLD
French President Emmanuel Macron announced that the nation will expand its nuclear arsenal in a move seen as a reflection of Europe's faltering trust in the United States. A14

THE ECONOMY
Oil prices rose as fighting in the Middle East continued for a third day, but long-term ramifications of the conflict are hard to gauge. A16
Sen. Bernie Sanders is set to unveil legislation would raise $4.4 trillion in taxes from U.S. billionaires. A16

STYLE
Hannah Gabsby, the unconventional comedian who backed away from career-boosting specials on Netflix, has a new project. B1

SPORTS
The Commanders are set to release injury-prone cornerback Marshon Lattimore. B7

THE REGION
A suspected road-rage attack ends with woman and a dog killed and a man fatally shot by a Va. state trooper. B13
George Washington University has sold its 120-acre Virginia Science and Technology Campus in Ashburn, school officials said. B13

BUSINESS NEWS.....A16
COMICS.....B4
OBITUARIES.....B15
OPINION PAGES.....A17
TELEVISION.....B6
WORLD NEWS.....A10

CONTENT © 2026
The Washington Post
Year 149, No. 54509

