

Boston Sunday Globe

Serving our community since 1872

APRIL 20, 2025

All hail my alma mater? Not for these Harvard alumni.

By Jim Puzzanghera
GLOBE STAFF

WASHINGTON — When high-ranking Trump White House official Peter Navarro took the stage at the Harvard Kennedy School for a speech on trade policy six years ago, he had nothing but kind words for his alma mater.

“It’s really great to be here. Forty years ago, when I was here, this was it — one little building and the beginning of what’s become a great dream for Cambridge and Harvard. So congratulations on what you guys are doing,” he told the crowd, encouraging students to “cherish every moment” at the university. “I was fortunate to spend time at this pinnacle of academia from 1977 to 1986, first as a student here at the Kennedy School, and then across the street as a PhD student in economics.”

Fast forward to Thursday: Navarro was in the Oval Office and watched as President Trump ripped Harvard to pieces.

REPUBLICANS, Page A12

‘He is stepping up to huge responsibility with grace, character, strength, and skill.’

LARRY SUMMERS, former Harvard president, on current president Alan Garber

Out front against Trump, an unassuming voice

By Mike Damiano
GLOBE STAFF

CAMBRIDGE — To say Alan Garber is an unlikely figure to lead the resistance is an understatement.

A mild-mannered Midwesterner, he was a physician and a scientist before serving for more than a decade as a behind-the-scenes administrator at Harvard. He became Harvard’s president practically by accident, thrust into the role after the sudden resignation of Claudine Gay in January of last year.

And yet, on Monday, when Harvard defied the federal government’s attempt to force the university into submission, Garber became the leading figure resisting a crackdown on institutions that President Trump sees as standing in the way of his ambitions.

Alan Garber

Harvard would take — defiance or acquiescence — had hung over Harvard Yard for at least a month before Garber and the university

GARBER, Page A13

Supreme Court halts expulsion of detainees

Emergency order for now blocks officials from using 1798 law for deportation

By Alan Feuer, Hamed Aleaziz, and Abbie VanSickle
NEW YORK TIMES

The Supreme Court temporarily blocked the Trump administration early Saturday from deporting another group of Venezuelan migrants accused of being gang members under the expansive powers of a rarely invoked wartime law.

“The government is directed not to remove any member of the putative class of detainees from the United States until further order of this court,” the court said in a brief, unsigned order that gave no reasoning, as is typical in emergency cases.

Justices Clarence Thomas and Samuel Alito dissented. The White House did not issue any immediate response.

More than 50 Venezuelans were scheduled to be flown out of the country — presumably to El Salvador — from an immigration detention center in Anson, Texas, according to two people with knowledge of the situation. The American Civil Liberties Union in recent days had already secured court orders barring similar deportations under the law, the Alien Enemies Act, in other places including New York, Denver, and Browns-

SUPREME COURT, Page A10

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF

Minute Men fired at British troops in the reenactment on Lexington Green. Saturday’s event was special for the town. B1.

REVOLUTIONARY IDEAS, ECHOING OVER TIME

Taking in the state of a divided nation on 250th anniversary of the ‘shot heard ’round the world’

By Aaron Pressman
GLOBE STAFF

In a country deeply divided and increasingly angry about politics, tens of thousands of people gathered peacefully around the Lexington Green on Saturday morning to witness the reenactment of a battle 250 years ago that set off the nation’s lengthy but staggered embrace of democracy.

In the predawn chill, just hours after the Supreme Court blocked the president from deporting immigrants under a law dating to 1798 during the country’s formative years, the crowd cheered the local Minute Men and booed the British regulars.

Some wore Red Sox hats, some wore MAGA hats, but they largely left their politics at home. Two vast fenced areas set aside for protesters were nearly empty (despite rumors earlier in the week that the far right extremist group the Proud Boys had been issued a permit to attend).

Lexington resident Lena Singh was one of the few protest-

BRETT PHELPS FOR THE BOSTON GLOBE

Children offered a range of emotions as the British regular forces marched in Lexington.

ers, sitting astride the yellow metal fencing, holding a sign that read “Patriots don’t tolerate tyranny.” Singh, in her mid 50s, said she wanted to remind people why the country was founded.

REVOLUTION, Page A16

South of the border, the Ocean State offers up breweries and a boatload of new stuff to do in Newport. Travel, N11.

Injured Celtics star Jaylen Brown has been cleared to play in the team’s first playoff game, Sunday against the Orlando Magic. C1.

The Patriot Ray

Sunday: Sunny, breezy. High 62-67, low 41-46.

Monday: Cooler, some sun. High 55-60, low 46-51.

Complete report, A24. Obituaries, A23.

VOL. 307, NO. 110

*

Suggested retail price $6.00

Grow Your Nest Egg!

4.25%
APY*
13-MONTH CD SPECIAL

AVAILABLE FOR PERSONAL AND BUSINESS ACCOUNTS

Open at any of our 15 full-service offices.

SCAN ME!

INSTITUTION FOR SAVINGS

BUILDING STRONGER COMMUNITIES TOGETHER SINCE 1820.

978-462-3106 • institutionforsavings.com

*Annual Percentage Yield (APY) is effective 4/17/25. Term deposit rates and APYs are fixed for the duration of the term. Minimum balance to open an account and obtain the Annual Percentage Yield shown is $500. A penalty will be imposed for early withdrawal. Account is available for personal and business accounts. Rates are subject to change. Deposits insured in full. Member FDIC • Member DIF