NO CAP ON MIGRANTS IN LABOUR'S CRACKDOWN

Starmer to say raft of new policies will mean arrivals must 'earn right to stay' – but Tories dismiss plans as 'laughable'

LABOUR'S plan to tackle spiralling immigration was last night dismissed as 'laughable' for not containing a cap on numbers.

Sir Keir Starmer's pledge to cut migration will be unveiled in full today, but critics immediately questioned how he would measure its success.

The Prime Minister will vow that 'migration numbers will fall'. Home Secretary Yvette Cooper said the plan would mean a 'substantial' drop on last year's net migration figure of 728,000, but refused to put a cap on numbers, saying it was a 'failed approach'.

Today's announcement comes less than a fortnight after Reform UK rode a wave of rising public anger
