

The Boston Globe

Serving our community since 1872

MONDAY, JUNE 22, 2026

PAT GREENHOUSE/GLOBE STAFF

Another World Cup Fan Fest watch party was followed by another round of cleanup on Boston City Hall Plaza, this one on Sunday.

Massive amounts of food and drink — and a few small surprises

World Cup cleanup crews get an assist from guys in kilts

By Emily Spatz and Jaden Perry
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

After the week Boston just had, there's certainly a landfill somewhere glistening with thousands of empty Corona bottles and greasy pizza boxes.

But there was little evidence of that indulgence on our streets, save for a few rogue traffic cones.

Despite the massive revelry that took over the city after visitors started arriving here for the World Cup two weeks ago, Boston's parks, streets, and trains have remained remarkably clean. The city has bolstered staffing levels for the summer, with many central areas transformed from massive Tartan parties to business as usual, clear of litter and trash, in a matter of hours.

Visitors have been helping out, too. "We love it here. We want to be respectful to your country," Jack Hutchison said, standing outside of Coogan's bar in downtown Thursday with his friends, beer cans in hand. The group, visiting from Scotland, said they were planning to clean up after themselves after what they said would be a day full of festivities on Friday, before the Morocco vs. Scotland match.

Several city employees said soccer fans assisted them in cleaning after watch parties and fan events, and tourists say they've been helping out as a "thank you" to the city that welcomed them with open arms.

TRASH, Page A6

JOHN TLUMACKI/GLOBE STAFF

Skip the usual Boston delicacies and make room for the ranch dressing and flavored potato chips

Scottish soccer fans devoured a Sal's pizza on a bench at Boston Common.

By Celine Hijazi
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

As Europeans flood Boston, the Transportation Security Administration has a message for visitors from across the pond.

"If you're visiting for a very large sporting event & you happen to discover RANCH while you're here... pls pack it in your checked bag on the way home," the TSA posted on its Instagram account, apparently inundated with fliers attempting to bring the quintessentially American salad dressing in their carry-ons.

That's right: Europeans are back in Boston, and they aren't here for our land this time around. Just ranch, apparently.

While on their Boston pilgrimages, many European visitors are experiencing culinary culture shock: novel condiments, shocking portion sizes, unexpected potato chip flavors, and surprisingly sweet sandwich bread at fast-food joints.

FOOD, Page A6

AI skills in demand but grads uneasy

Youngest workers have deep concerns about privacy, accuracy, climate

By Bryan Hecht
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

A schism is deepening for young graduates around AI.

While emerging as some of the most frequent and savvy users of generative artificial intelligence, Gen Z also remains its staunchest opponent, studies show.

Students and experts said employer demand for AI fluency is at the heart of the divide.

"It's an eat or be eaten mentality," said Gavin Federizo, a 20-year-old junior philosophy major at Tufts University studying AI policy. "We all hate the fact that AI is being used, but we [more so] hate the fact that we feel like we need to [use it] at this point."

As AI sentiment has grown increasingly negative among students and young professionals over the last year, Boston's job market has exploded with demand for AI skills, including for entry-level positions.

On job search platform Indeed, mentions of AI abilities in Boston job listings nearly tripled within a year, greatly outpacing national growth alongside other tech hubs such as New York City.

More than a third of junior-level positions now

ARTIFICIAL INTELLIGENCE, Page A7

Pedestrian dies after carjacking in Mattapan

Spasm of violence leaves residents, workers shaken

By Allyson Chiu
GLOBE STAFF
and Audrey Tomlin
GLOBE CORRESPONDENT

Residents and workers along Blue Hill Avenue in Mattapan were left shaken this weekend after a man allegedly carjacked a vehicle Saturday afternoon, struck and killed a woman on a sidewalk, and then was captured by bystanders and held until police arrived, officials said.

The victim, who has not yet been identified by authorities, was pronounced dead at the scene. Police arrested Ibraim Matos, 37, of Hyde Park, who was charged Sunday with murder, carjacking, and leaving the scene of two crashes.

When Jay King arrived at Blue Hill Avenue Saturday afternoon for work, the usually bustling stretch of road in Mattapan was blocked off with yellow police tape.

A body covered with a white sheet lay in the street outside a lawyer's office and a pizza shop. The scene, King said, left her rattled.

"It's really devastating, and it's scary because it's close to home," said King, 31, who works at a

CARJACKING, Page A6

Bolt out of the blue

Monday: Storm, heavy rain.
High 72-77, low 61-66.

Tuesday: Rain in morning.
High 69-74, low 63-68.

Sunrise: 5:08. Sunset: 8:25.
Weather and comics, D4-5.
Obituaries, C9.

VOL. 309, NO. 173

*

Suggested retail price
$4.00

US negotiations with Iran for a permanent peace began in a tense atmosphere after President Trump threatened to attack and told the country's president to watch what he says. A3.

Cape Cod businesses are struggling to find workers amid delays for visas for seasonal workers. D1.

Wyndham Clark, nearly blowing a six-stroke lead, held off a charge by Sam Burns to capture his second US Open title in four years. C1.

Donations pour in from around the world for families of the seven victims of the Lily Jean fishing tragedy. B1.

For breaking news, updated stories, and more, visit our website:

BostonGlobe.com

No lyn', it's a bobcat

By Brooke Hauser
GLOBE STAFF

NORTHAMPTON — I recently placed a call with the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Wildlife as a private citizen with an urgent question: Bobcat or mountain lion? The issue came up after I posted on Facebook a photo and video of what I believed to be a bobcat prowling around my yard.

REPORTER'S NOTEBOOK

Soon, the skeptics surfaced. One person emailed me to ask whether I was sure it was a bobcat; maybe it was a mountain lion. Even my mother questioned me, commenting that the bobcats in Florida have short tails — not longish like the one captured by my camera.

MassWildlife was unequivocal when I later sent in a photo: Definitely a bobcat. However, the more research I did about bobcats, the more testimonies I encountered.

BOBCAT, Page A7

BILL BYRNE/MASSWILDLIFE

Bobcats are sometimes mistaken for mountain lions, which are not found here.