

Fire set at home of Pa. governor

Shapiro, a Democrat, was uninjured in what state police are calling arson

BY PRAVEENA SOMASUNDARAM

Pennsylvania officials on Sunday took one man into custody in their investigation of a fire that was set at Gov. Josh Shapiro's residence overnight while he and his family were asleep inside.

Cody Balmer, 38, of Harrisburg, was taken into custody Sunday in connection with what Shapiro (D) described as a "targeted" attack hours after he and his family had held a seder dinner to celebrate the Jewish holiday of Passover at his home, the state's official residence for the governor.

Charges had not been filed as of Sunday evening, but are likely to include attempted murder, terrorism, aggravated arson and aggravated assault on an enumerated person, Dauphin County District Attorney Francis Chardo said in a news conference. Chardo, Shapiro and other state authorities gathered for the media event at the Harrisburg residence, standing in front of yellow caution tape blocking off broken windows and their charred sills.

Balmer allegedly came over a fence on the property with homemade incendiary devices before forcibly entering the residence and setting a fire, officials said Sunday. Balmer was apprehended later in the day in Harrisburg. Officials said they did not yet know a motive.

On Saturday night, Shapiro and his family celebrated Passover in the state dining room of

SEE ARSON ON A2

NATE SMALLWOOD/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Workers prepare parts of a swing for packaging inside the Little Tikes toy factory in Hudson, Ohio, on Thursday.

Manufacturers struggle with uncertainty of Trump's plans

BY ABHA BHATTARAI

President Donald Trump's sweeping tariff-driven reversal of decades of free trade is creating financial chaos for the very sector it's meant to rebuild: American manufacturing.

Although the full extent of economic damage is still unclear, volatile tariff policies are making it tougher for American companies to make and sell goods, whether they're producing medical devices in Florida, toys in Ohio or bicycles in California.

Even though the Trump administration put many of its sharpest levies on hold last week while boosting tariffs on China, companies around the country say the recent messiness of announcements and uncertainty is hurting business: Their costs are rising, and demand is slowing as spooked customers in the United States and abroad slam the brakes on spending.

The economic picture, both in the United States and globally, is quickly souring as the U-turn in

SEE MANUFACTURERS ON A7

Chips, phones, laptops still face industry-specific tariffs

BY NITASHA TIKU, AARON GREGG, MARIANA ALFARO AND JEFF STEIN

U.S. levies on semiconductor chips, smartphones and laptops — which the White House exempted late Friday from a slew of "reciprocal" tariffs — are in fact still in the works, and will be determined in a month or two, Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick and other top Trump administration officials asserted Sunday.

Lutnick said tariffs on those electronic goods will ultimately be decided through an industry-specific tariff model focused on the semiconductor supply chain and imposed via Section 232, which governs national security-related tariffs and requires a lengthy process for study and comment.

The Trump administration has previously cited 232 as a potential avenue for semiconductor tariffs. And President Donald Trump issued his own clarification Sunday, stating that no such exemptions

SEE CHIPS ON A8

Contour of trade desires emerges

U.S. DEMANDS STILL SLOWLY DEVELOPING

Stopping China's evasion of tariffs a likely goal

BY JEFF STEIN

More natural gas purchases from American firms. Fewer tariffs on U.S. exports. Lower taxes on Silicon Valley tech giants. Pledges to stop China from using other nations to ship its products to the United States.

These are just some of the demands the Trump administration is expected to make in negotiations with dozens of countries that are trying to avoid steep levies that were briefly put in place last week before being abruptly delayed. While substantial confusion remains about what precisely the White House will want, a clearer picture of what these bilateral deals could look like is beginning to emerge, according to interviews with more than a dozen people involved in or briefed on the talks, some of whom spoke on the condition of anonymity to reflect private deliberations.

On Wednesday, President Donald Trump suddenly paused large-scale tariffs that were scheduled to go into effect on more than 70 nations, a move he partially attributed to alarming fluctuations in the bond market. The president said the tariffs would remain suspended for 90 days to give his advisers and their foreign counterparts time to reach individual agreements — a process he said had already begun with Vietnam,

SEE TRUMP ON A6

PAUL RATJE/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Military border surge takes shape

With wartime hardware, Trump administration sends a message

Sgt. 1st Class Carlos Zamora and his fellow soldiers stood alongside their 20-ton Stryker combat vehicle overlooking a labyrinth of dusty trails and cliffs, an inhospitable desertscape that for inhositable proved difficult for U.S. authorities to patrol amid the surge in illegal border crossings and drug smuggling from Mexico.

Although U.S. Border Patrol agents had detained two migrants nearby a few hours earlier, Zamora's deployment — a key

BY DAN LAMOTHE IN SUNLAND PARK, N.M.

A U.S. Army soldier climbs off a Stryker armored infantry transport along the U.S.-Mexico border. The vehicles were used extensively in Iraq and Afghanistan before deployment to Ukraine.

facet of President Donald Trump's militarization of the U.S.-Mexico frontier — has been quiet so far, he said. A veteran of four combat deployments to Afghanistan and Iraq, Zamora recalled how he and his team recently observed other potential border crossers who appeared to change their plans abruptly once they spotted the olive-drab armored vehicle on the hill.

"Ever since the Stryker came into play," he said, "we see more

SEE BORDER ON A4

State Dept. office's memo undercuts official claims about student's arrest

BY JOHN HUDSON

Days before masked Immigration and Customs Enforcement agents detained Tufts University student Rumeysa Ozturk to deport her, the State Department determined that the Trump administration had not produced any evidence showing that she engaged in antisemitic activities or made public statements supporting a terrorist organization, as the government has alleged.

The finding, contained in a March memo that was described to The Washington Post, said Secretary of State Marco Rubio did not have sufficient grounds for revoking Ozturk's visa under an authority empowering the top U.S. diplomat to safeguard the foreign policy interests of the United States.

The memo, written by an office within the State Department, raises doubts about the public accusations made by the Trump administration as it has sought to justify Ozturk's deportation. The Department of Homeland Security has said Ozturk engaged in activities "in support of Hamas," a U.S.-designated terrorist organization, but neither that agency nor U.S. prosecutors have provided evidence for that claim.

The revocation of Ozturk's visa is part of an expanding crack-down on international students and scholars by the Trump administration including hundreds of visa revocation cases.

Ozturk, a 30-year-old doctoral student from Turkey, was targeted by the government for co-writing an op-ed last year in the Tufts student newspaper criticizing the university's response to the Israel-Gaza war. A hearing in Ozturk's case is scheduled for Monday in federal court in Vermont. Her lawyers say her possible deportation would violate the United States' founding principles of freedom of speech.

When asked about the memo, the State Department said that "we do not comment on ongoing

SEE STUDENT ON A5

Mcllroy roars

Rory Mcllroy lets loose after winning the Masters in a playoff Sunday in Augusta, Georgia. The victory gave Mcllroy the career Grand Slam; he's just the sixth man to win all four major titles.

More in Sports, D1

RICHARD HEATHCOTE/GETTY IMAGES

IN THE NEWS

Elections overhaul A recent Trump order could force states to hand-count ballots or spend millions of dollars on voting systems not yet on the market, experts said. A9

Fresh strikes Israel's military bombed the last fully functional hospital in Gaza City, giving people just 20 minutes to evacuate. A13

THE NATION Trump's physician pronounced him "fully fit" to carry out his presidential duties. A2

The president and Cabinet members connected with UFC fans at an event in Miami. A3

THE WORLD Young people in Turkey feel newly empowered to demonstrate against the government. A10

A freeze on U.S. foreign aid has upended the lives of Kenyan families battling HIV. A11

THE ECONOMY Personal finance columnist Michelle Singletary answers readers' questions about taxes. A15

THE REGION D.C. Mayor Muriel E. Bowser suggested that in beautifying the city, Trump start with federal parkland. B1

A new hospital will give an under-resourced swath of the District nearby access to advanced lifesaving care for the first time in at least a generation. B1

Washingtonians celebrated Emancipation Day, which for some has taken on new meaning under Trump. B1

STYLE At a party with a "Make America Hot Again" theme thrown by a conservative publication, an "objectively beautiful lifestyle" and an "objectively superior worldview" go hand in hand. C1

What are Americans fearful of U.S. tariffs' effects panic-buying? C1

BUSINESS NEWS.....A15

COMICS.....C5

OBITUARIES.....B4

OPINION PAGES.....A16

TELEVISION.....C4

WORLD NEWS.....A10

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post
Year 148, No. 54186

