

Chicago Tribune

QUESTIONS? CALL 1-800-TRIBUNE

SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 2025

BREAKING NEWS AT CHICAGOTRIBUNE.COM

President injects new uncertainty into tariffs

Trump delays starting date with food prices set to rise

By Josh Boak

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — For weeks, President Donald Trump was promising the world economy would change Friday with his new tariffs in place. It was an ironclad deadline, administration officials assured the public.

But when Trump signed the order Thursday night imposing new tariffs, the start date of the punishing import taxes was pushed back to next Friday so the tariff schedule could be updated. The change in tariffs on 66 countries, the European Union, Taiwan and the Falkland Islands was potentially welcome news to countries that had not yet reached a deal with the U.S.

It also injected a new dose of uncertainty for consumers and businesses still wondering what's going to happen and when.

Once Trump's planned tariffs take effect, Americans will see an average tax of 18.3% for imported products, the highest rate since 1934, according to the Budget Lab at Yale, a nonpartisan policy research center.

Tariffs are a tax, and U.S. consumers are likely to foot at least part of the bill.

The Budget Lab estimated that prices will increase 1.8% in the short term as a result of the trade war the U.S. waged this year. That's the equivalent of a $2,400 loss of income per U.S. household, the group said.

The tariffs will almost certainly result in higher food prices, according to an analysis by the nonpartisan Tax Foundation. The U.S. simply doesn't make enough of some products, like bananas or coffee, to satisfy demand. Fish, beer and liquor are also likely to get more expensive, the foundation said.

Ben Aneff, managing partner at Tribeca Wine Merchants and president of the U.S. Wine Trade Alliance, said shoppers would see prices rise 20% to 25% at his store because of tariffs and the declining value of the dollar.

"Nobody can afford to eat the tariff. It gets passed on," he said.

Trump has promised that his tax increases on the nearly $3 trillion in goods imported to the United States will usher in newfound wealth, launch a cavalcade of new factory jobs, reduce the

Turn to Tariffs, Page 6

MORE INSIDE

As Trump pushes tariffs, hiring in US slows down

U.S. hiring is slowing sharply as President Donald Trump's erratic and radical trade policies paralyze businesses and raise doubts about the outlook for the world's largest economy. U.S. employers added just 73,000 jobs last month, the Labor Department reported Friday, well short of the 115,000 expected. Business

■ Trump ousts official overseeing jobs figures after a dismal labor report. Nation & World in Business, Page 6

Stars to align at Wrigley

After anxiously awaiting the announcement, Friendly Confines to host 2027 All-Star Game as mayor touts city's big-event draw

By Meghan Montemurro and Jake Sheridan

Chicago Tribune

Framed by the backdrop of the ballpark's iconic center-field scoreboard and green ivy, the long-awaited reveal was less anticipatory and more celebratory, a moment years in the making.

The 2027 All-Star Game officially is coming to Wrigley Field.

Major League Baseball Commissioner Rob Manfred made the announcement Friday that the Friendly Confines will host the Midsummer Classic for the first time since 1990, with the game scheduled for July 13, 2027. Wrigley will become the third ballpark to host the All-Star Game for a fourth time, joining Cleveland's Municipal Stadium and old Yankee Stadium in New York.

Among those attending the announcement were Gov. JB Pritzker, Mayor Brandon Johnson, Chicago Cubs Chairman Tom Ricketts and board members Laura Ricketts and Todd Ricketts, President of Business Operations Crane Kenney and

Turn to Wrigley, Page 2

Historic South Side neighborhood at a crossroads amid fears that proposed soccer stadium would raise property values, displace community members

Jerry Lee stands on a bustling South Wentworth Avenue at 23rd Street in Chicago's Chinatown neighborhood on Friday. Lee and others have started to wonder about the neighborhood's future as Chinatowns in other cities dwindle. TERRENCE ANTONIO JAMES/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Some Chinatown residents don't want to play with Fire

By Tess Kenny

Chicago Tribune

When Jerry Lee moved to Chicago nearly five years ago, the California native found community hard to come by. As the 31-year-old landed in town for graduate school, he didn't know a single person, though he found one place that felt like home: Chinatown.

Now, with the Chicago Fire soccer team announcing in June plans for a proposed $650 million soccer stadium a half a mile away from Chinatown, Lee and other Chicago residents have started to wonder about the neighborhood's future as Chinatowns in other cities continue to dwindle.

"Chinatown was (somewhere) that allowed me ... to find a place where I felt like I fit in," Lee said at a recent town hall where community members voiced their qualms and hopes for the development.

As envisioned, the Fire's proposed stadium, slated to open ahead of the 2028 Major League Soccer regular season, would be situated along the Chicago River just south of Roosevelt Road and total 22,000 seats. The stadium would be privately funded by the Fire's owner, Joe Mansueto, and serve as the anchor tenant of The 78, an empty stretch of riverfront southwest of the Loop where developer Related Midwest has sought for years to plant a brand-new neighborhood.

During a two-hour meeting Wednesday night at Chinatown's Pui Tak Center, organized by the Coalition for a Better Chinese American Community and Teen Coalition for Chinatown, concerns that The 78 would gentrify and displace residents of the historic Chinatown neighborhood were ever present. But organizers made it clear that the gathering was just the start

Turn to Stadium, Page 2

Former U.S. Rep. Bobby Rush, center left, and Fredrika Newton, widow of Huey P. Newton, co-founder of the Black Panther Party, unveil a plaque at the original site of the Illinois chapter headquarters at 2350 W. Madison St. in Chicago on July 26. JOHN J. KIM/CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Black Panthers' monumental history in Ill. recognized with heritage trail

By Darcel Rockett

Chicago Tribune

The assassination of Illinois Black Panther Party Deputy Chairman Fred Hampton and Defense Captain Mark Clark by Chicago police and the FBI on Dec. 4, 1969, caused Larry Jenkins to leave his "well-paying" job with the Chicago Tribune after two years of employment to volunteer his typesetting and press skills with the party.

"I was making flyers," said the Bronzeville resident. Jenkins was one of many Illinois Black Panther Party members at a celebratory event last week that was years in the making, according to Leila Wills, daughter of Panther Party members and executive director of the Historical Preservation Society of the Illinois Chapter of the Black Panther Party.

The building at 2350 W. Madison St., on the Near West Side, where a Walgreens currently sits, was once the headquarters of the Illinois chapter of the party. The original structure was demolished, however a marker with the Black Panthers logo was unveiled July 26 launching the Black Panther Party Heritage Trail in Illinois — the first marker of over a dozen sites that commemorate local party history.

The trail will serve as an educational tool, Wills wrote in a pamphlet, showing the breadth of the inaugural 13 Chicago sites where the black and gold markers will be placed. While the trail continues to be built, the inaugural expanse of markers placed into sidewalks or affixed to buildings runs from Peoria through Chicago to Rockford. The designated locales are where Illinois party members helped their communities back in the day — from the Spurgeon "Jake" Winters Free People's Medical Care Center

Turn to Panthers, Page 4

