

T-storm 85/70 • Tomorrow: Mostly sunny 85/64 B24

Democracy Dies in Darkness

SUNDAY, AUGUST 24, 2025 • $6

The Gen.Ukrainian organization researches the best ways to help campers cope with the effects of loss. For Elvira and Kyrylo, it was also a place to find love.

OKSANA PARAFENIUK/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

To hear Elvira tell the story, she and Kyrylo fell in love on the fourth day of summer camp. The buildings were rustic and wood-hewn, the skies stacked tall with clouds. It was a place where anyone might start to feel normal again but especially children of war, forced to grow up too soon. Afternoons brought crafts and vanilla cones, hula-hoops and a pool with a high dive. No cell-phones. In the swarm of 50 kids — ages 7 to 17, all in matching cotton shirts with pink hearts on the front, each traumatized in their own way — Elvira and Kyrylo found each other.

Amid the trauma of war, learning to be children again

BY LIZZIE JOHNSON AND KOSTIANTYN KHUDOV
IN LVIV REGION, UKRAINE

ABOVE: Kyrylo, 12, and Elvira, 11, dance together during a disco evening at the Gen.Ukrainian summer camp in July.

She was 11 but wished she was 15, with brown hair that hit her waist and sandals shaped like sharks. She liked to argue with her assigned psychologist, aiming to annoy her as much as possible — the same tactic she took with her roommate, Katya. He, “almost 13” but actually still 12, wore bright, baggy shorts and a thin-lipped smile. The dye streaking his blond hair was more pink than the intended red.

SEE UKRAINE ON A12

Peace effort: A frustrated Trump signals he’s stepping back. A2

Land for peace? Ukrainians weigh hard choices to placate Russia. A16

Pentagon drafts plans to dispatch troops to Chicago

CRIME CRACKDOWN IN WORKS FOR WEEKS

A possible blueprint, similar to L.A., for other cities

BY DAN LAMOTHE

The Pentagon has for weeks been planning a military deployment to Chicago as President Donald Trump seeks to crack down on crime, homelessness and undocumented immigration, in a model that could later be used in other major cities, officials familiar with the matter said.

The planning, which has not been previously disclosed, involves several options, including mobilizing at least a few thousand members of the National Guard as soon as September to what is the third most populous city in the United States.

The mission, if approved, would have parallels to the polarizing operation that Trump ordered in Los Angeles in June, when he deployed 4,000 members of the California National Guard and 700 active-duty Marines despite the protests of state and local leaders. The use of thousands of active-duty troops in Chicago also has been discussed but is considered less

SEE CHICAGO ON A18

Scene in D.C.: Troops have been met with appreciation, doubt. B17

Texas is only first salvo in GOP’s map offensive

Efforts afoot in several other red states as party angles for a political edge

BY HANNAH KNOWLES
AND DYLAN WELLS

President Donald Trump and his allies are charging ahead with plans to try to redraw the congressional map in red states beyond Texas, pressuring GOP lawmakers to act and setting up an all-out push for political advantage that will be difficult for Democrats to match ahead of the midterms.

Republican state lawmakers early Saturday approved an unusual mid-decade redraw of the U.S. House districts in Texas, adding five red seats on a new map that Trump advocated. Democrats in California retaliated by passing bills that will ask the liberal state’s voters to add five blue seats in a November special election. Now the legislative action in a nationwide redistricting battle is set to move to Missouri and three other Republican-controlled states.

Democrats have repeatedly promised to “fight fire with fire,” relying on the states they control. But they face more obstacles — and have taken few concrete steps toward redrawing blue-state maps outside California.

Many state Republicans balked

SEE REDISTRICTING ON A24

Before FBI raids, Trump had lashed out at Bolton

Anger at former adviser’s barbs, but no evidence president ordered action

BY NATALIE ALLISON AND MICHAEL BIRNBAUM

Days before his former national security adviser’s home and office were raided by the FBI on Friday, President Donald Trump had trained his sights on his onetime aide, publicly rebuking John Bolton for criticizing his policy toward Russia.

The president said Friday that he was not aware of the raids until they occurred that morning, and there is no evidence that the investigation into Bolton was launched in response to Bolton’s recent criticisms of Trump.

People close to Trump have privately noted, however, that the president was bothered by Bolton’s recent deprecation of his attempts at peacemaking. And both Trump and some of his top appointees have talked openly about using the criminal justice system against his perceived enemies. That has raised questions about the timing of the decision to move forward with investigating long-

SEE BOLTON ON A19

A last lifeline in ‘detention alley’

In rural Louisiana: 9 ICE detention centers, 7,000 detainees and one overwhelmed immigration lawyer

BY RUBY CRAMER

ALEXANDRIA, LA. — Christopher Kinnison tried to find his client on the computer screen, but the video feed was too grainy to make out faces. What he could see was a small room with white walls, a table and 13 men wearing the same green-and-white striped jumpsuits, all waiting to appear before a judge who had the power to deport them.

“I’m not sure which one he is,” Kinnison said, looking closer.

The men were being held in Ferriday, Louisiana, inside a place called River Correctional Center. All over the country, people who had been detained by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement were being sent to facilities like this one: a former prison on a rural two-lane highway, in a town of 3,000, in a part of the South where immigration lawyers are scarce and denial rates for requests to stay in the United States are among the highest in the nation.

Kinnison, 46, worked at his own one-man law firm in the central Louisiana city of Alexandria, putting him within a two-hour drive of the state’s nine ICE facilities, the highest number of any state other than Texas. Most of his clients were detainees, and his business cards promised “Fervent Representation for Uncertain Times,” because he knew how quickly immigration policy could change with every new administration. But nothing had prepared him for the change that began when President Donald Trump took office in January.

KATHLEEN FLYNN/FOR THE WASHINGTON POST

Christopher Kinnison’s one-man law firm in Louisiana handles mainly immigration cases.

Arrests were up in every part of the country compared with the year before. There were reports of people being detained by ICE at courthouses, farms, car washes, a meat production plant in Nebraska, an Italian restaurant in San Diego and outside a church in Oregon, sending the number of people in immigration detention to more than 56,000, well over the budgeted capacity of 41,500.

One in every 8 of those detainees ended up somewhere in rural Louisiana, becoming some of the most hidden-away people in America. Every week, more calls came into the law office in Alexandria, and now it was half a year into Trump’s presidency, and Kinnison hadn’t been able to slow down long enough to process what his days at work were becoming.

SEE LAWYER ON A8

Abrego case: Lawyers say Uganda deportation threat is coercion. A7

U.S. stake in Intel another rap on the invisible hand

The list of taxpayer entanglements with free enterprise grows

BY GERRIT DE VYNCK

President Donald Trump’s announcement that the U.S. government would take a 10 percent stake in chipmaker Intel adds to a string of multimillion dollar compacts with major tech firms that have trampled conventions insulating private business from the American presidency and government.

The unprecedented deals over the last month have seen some of the nation’s largest public companies, including Apple and Nvidia, conform with Trump’s demands. Some pledged to invest hundreds of billions of dollars in line with his policy goals and others to pay the federal government an extra cut of revenue not required by existing taxes.

The U.S. government is set to become Intel’s largest shareholder, after the chipmaker confirmed late Friday that the government agreed to invest $8.9 billion previously allocated to the firm in federal grants to own 9.9 percent

SEE INTEL ON A9

BUSINESS

Beef prices are soaring, but meat lovers haven’t lost their stomachs. B9

METRO

In Virginia, some in GOP pin hopes on AG race as Earle-Sears reboots. B17

SPORTS

Oksana Chusovitina, 50, is determined to make her ninth Olympics. B1

ARTS & STYLE

37 rules of going to the theater to help you avoid becoming the drama.

BOOK WORLD

Fall preview: The best new books for children, picked by librarians.

TRAVEL

Americans, who can now fly direct to Greenland, test its tourism industry.

COMICS.....INSERT
OBTUARIES.....B20
OPINION PAGES.....A20
WORLD NEWS.....A14

CONTENT © 2025
The Washington Post / Year 148, No. 54318

