Aldermen want probe of protest response

Hearing set to examine any role played by federal agents and Chicago police during altercation

Members of the City Council's Latino Caucus are calling for an investigation into how Chicago police responded to the demonstration Wednesday outside a U.S. Customs and Immigration Enforcement office in the South Loop, where federal agents detained immigrants and clashed with aldermen in an apparent new phase in President Donald Trump's mass deportation plans.

Twelve of the 14 aldermen in the caucus signed a letter condemning the high-profile showdown at 2245 S. Michigan Ave. The council's Committee on Immigrant and Refugee Rights — which Latino Caucus Chair Ald. Andre Vasquez, 40th, leads — will hold a hearing “to examine the extent of ICE's misconduct and determine whether the Chicago Police Department played any role in (Wednesday's) actions,” according to the letter.

The Police Department has denied that officers aided the federal agents.

“We condemn in the strongest terms ICE's unlawful detainment practices,” the statement from Latino Caucus members read. “We stand united in calling for a full investigation into the conduct of ICE agents involved in this operation and for the immediate release of all individuals detained under these unlawful circumstances.”

Vasquez told the Tribune that the committee later this month hopes to call Chicago police

Superintendent Larry Snelling and Mayor Brandon Johnson's deputy mayors Garien Gatewood and Beatriz Ponce de León, who oversee community safety and immigration rights, respectively. The North Side alderman cited “conflicting” information on the events at the ICE office and said “we just want to make sure that protocols are being followed properly related to CPD.”

Smoky air expected to shroud city for 3rd day

As Canada's wildfires continue to burn, Chicago's air quality was worst in nation. What does this mean for summer?

Tiny, airborne smoke particles blowing in from Canadian wildfires resisted dispersal from a steady, light rain across the Chicago area Wednesday, concentrating even more Thursday to reach levels unhealthy for the general public. The smoke pushed northeast Illinois into its third day in a row of bad air quality Friday and the state into its first two air pollution action days of the year.

Chicago's air quality was ranked the worst in the United States on Thursday, according to Swiss air quality technology company IQAir. At one point during the day, The Washington Post reported, the city had the second-worst air quality among the world's major cities.

“Whatever pollutants were in the air (Wednesday), because of the rain, got suppressed and deposited on the ground. But the wildfires are still happening in the north,” said Ashish Sharma, a professor of atmospheric sciences at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, whose research focuses on climate and air quality modeling. “It is sending smoke continuously. Rain would have offset the past smoke, but it won't offset the new smoke.”

Before the summer even officially begins, Chicagoans have already encountered their fair share of nasty particles in the air.

In May, a rare dust storm enveloped the city in agricultural sediment. This week, hazy skies are reminiscent of the intense Canadian wildfires of 2023, which made Chicago the second-most-polluted major city in the country that year.

The smoke reaching the Midwest now mostly originates from fires that have been raging northwest of the provincial capital of Winnipeg in Manitoba since mid-May.

Some may be wondering — will it be a summer of days spent

Trump, Musk ties fray in acrimony

Personal attacks fly across social media amid public feud

By Michelle L. Price

WASHINGTON — President Donald Trump on Thursday threatened to cut Elon Musk's government contracts as their fractured alliance rapidly escalated into a public feud with Trump suggesting he would use the U.S. government to hurt his fellow billionaire financially.

The spectacular blow-up between the president of the United States and the world's richest man played out on their respective social media platforms after Trump first broached the topic in a White House meeting with Germany's new leader.

The rancorous breakup happened less than a week after they appeared together at the White House and Trump thanked Musk for his brief but tumultuous time in the U.S. government.

Trump had largely remained silent as Musk stewed over the last few days on his social media platform X, condemning the president's signature tax cuts and spending bill.

But Trump clapped back Thursday in the Oval Office, lamented their frayed relationship and said he was “very disappointed in Musk.”

Musk responded on social media in real time. Trump retched up the stakes when he turned to his own social media network, Truth Social, and threatened to use the U.S. government to hurt Musk's bottom line with his internet company Starlink and rocket company SpaceX.

Reinsdorf reaches deal to sell Sox to Ishbia

Chicago investor wouldn't start buying controlling interest until 2029 at earliest

A plan is in place for the future of the Chicago White Sox, with Justin Ishbia stepping into the on-deck circle.

Sox Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf and Ishbia reached a long-term investment agreement that establishes a framework for Ishbia to obtain a future controlling interest in the team, the Sox announced Thursday.

Ishbia, the founder and managing partner of Chicago-based private equity firm Shore Capital Partners, will make capital infusions into the Sox as a limited partner in 2025 and 2026 that will be used to pay down debt and support ongoing operations, the team said.

Reinsdorf, 89, will have the option to sell his controlling interest to Ishbia from 2029 to 2033. After the 2034 season, Ishbia would have the option to acquire the controlling interest.

The Sox said that in the event of any such transaction, all limited partners would have the opportunity to sell to Ishbia at that time. Ishbia's brother, Mat, and father, Jeff, also will be significant investors.

An April CNBC article ranked the Sox No. 15 on its Major League Baseball valuation list at $2.15 billion.

Ishbia has an estimated net worth of $4.3 billion, according to Forbes. In 2023, he and his brother bought a majority stake in the NBA's Phoenix Suns and WNBA's Phoenix Mercury, and Justin serves as the alternate governor of the Suns, Mercury and Major League Soccer's Nashville SC.

Ishbia, 47, grew up in suburban Detroit. He owns a 3.7-acre lakefront property in Winnetka where a mansion is being built
