

ULTIMATE EASTER WINE GUIDE

The best supermarket bargains

Pullout
inside

LABOUR TURMOIL ON TRANS RULING

As party faces pressure to rip up gender laws, ministers are STILL in a muddle on protecting women-only spaces

By Sam Merriman
and Harriet Line

LABOUR'S stance on women's rights descended into farce last night as a minister failed to back single-sex spaces and its union paymaster said it will ignore the Supreme Court judgment.

A health minister refused four times to say which changing room transgender women should use – despite the unanimous ruling that they are not legally women.

And the president of one of Britain's largest unions – which gives Labour millions of pounds a year – said the historic decision 'does not change' its pro-trans policy.

It came as Left-wing Labour MPs and the party's LGBT+ groups criticised the findings of the country's highest court, and Chancellor Rachel Reeves squirmed when asked if Keir Starmer should apologise to an MP for criticising her assertion that only women have a cervix.

Tory leader Kemi Badenoch said Labour's failure to back single-sex spaces

Turn to Page 6

Magical result: A triumphant JK Rowling in the Bahamas

JK toasts Supreme Court win on board her super yacht

SEE PAGES 6-7