

RANCHER Dan Greenwood lifts the leg of a fallen calf to inspect the wounds it suffered in a wolf attack.

ANDY BARRON For The Times

Ranchers seeking permission to ‘remove’ problem wolves

SIERRA VALLEY, Calif. — Standing among his cattle in a broad green pasture, beneath a brilliant blue sky about an hour north of Lake Tahoe, rancher Dan Greenwood surveyed the idyllic landscape and called it what he feels it has become: a death trap.

Behind him, a 3-month-old calf that had been mauled by wolves the night before lay in the grass with deep wounds on its flanks. Two of its legs were so badly injured they could barely support the calf’s weight when it tried to stand. The animal’s agitated mother paced a few feet away.

Greenwood wrapped his hand around one of the calf’s ankles and gently rolled it onto its back to inspect the savage bite wounds.

He was trying to decide whether to give the calf an-

Many in Northern California are begging state officials to approve measures to protect their cattle

By Jack Dolan

MALIA BYRTUS California Wolf Project/UC Berkeley
A NEWLY collared wolf from the Beyem Seyo pack.

other day to see if it could recover enough to keep up with its mother — or put it out of its misery before the wolves returned to finish the job.

“If I can just walk up and grab him, then so can the wolf,” Greenwood said with a pained look on his face. “That’s not a challenge for them at all.”

What is a challenge in the rugged expanse of the Sierra Valley right now is keeping up with all the calls coming in from ranchers whose cattle have been mauled by wolves. Across the valley, which straddles Sierra and Plumas counties, there have been 30 confirmed wolf attacks since March, 18 of them fatal, said Sierra County Sheriff Mike Fisher.

That doesn’t include a deer that was attacked in a [See Wolves, A12]

A bitter feud over the law in O.C.

Ex-investigator alleges district attorney and others conspired to quash inquiry into possible corruption.

By Salvador Hernandez

It’s a bitter feud the likes of which are seldom seen in law enforcement circles — or at least those that boil over into public view.

For over seven years now, Orange County’s top prosecutor and a decorated former cop have been locked in an acrimonious dispute that shows little sign of abating. Both parties have accused the other of fractured ethics and corruption, and even an independent arbitrator likened the situation to a simmering cauldron.

Damon Tucker, a former supervising investigator for the county, has alleged in a lawsuit that he uncovered potential evidence of money laundering, terrorist threats and extortion by his then-boss, Orange County Dist. Atty. Todd Spitzer. Tucker claims in his lawsuit that Spitzer and others quashed [See Feud, A8]

KEVIN DIETSCH Getty Images

PRESIDENT TRUMP, joined by Tesla CEO Elon Musk, speaks to reporters.

Trump says Musk is ‘really not leaving,’ fueling legal challenge

It is unclear whether the presidential advisor will still have a hand in government.

By Michael Wilner

WASHINGTON — Elon Musk, the world’s richest man, who has led an effort in the Trump administration to cut jobs and programs across the federal government, stood by President Trump’s side on Friday in the Oval Office, officially for the last time as a government employee. But neither man was clear whether Musk’s active hand in government is truly over.

Their display of unity comes after Musk, the entrepreneur behind Tesla and SpaceX, issued a series of criticisms of Trump’s policies, both directly and through his companies, and as reports emerge that the billionaire fought fierce battles with the president’s aides and has relied on potent drugs while serving as Trump’s confidant.

“Nobody like him,” Trump said of Musk at the White House event. “He had to go through the slings and the arrows, which is a shame, because he’s an incredible patriot.

“Many of the DOGE people, Elon, are staying behind. So they’re not leaving. And Elon’s really not leaving,” Trump added. “He’s going to be back and forth, I think, I have a feeling. It’s his baby.”

Musk praised the team of DOGE, an acronym for the Department of Government Efficiency program, for saving what he said was $175 billion in government spending. The program had ini- [See Musk, A6]

Supreme Court says migrants on ‘parole’ may be deported

An emergency appeal is granted as Trump seeks to end a Biden policy that allowed in more than 500,000.

By David G. Savage and Andrea Castillo

WASHINGTON — President Trump may seek to deport hundreds of thousands of immigrants who recently entered the United States under a two-year grant of parole, the Supreme Court decided Friday.

Over two dissents, the justices granted an emergency appeal and set aside rulings by judges in Boston who blocked Trump’s repeal of the parole policy adopted by the Biden administration.

That 2023 policy opened the door for Cubans, Haitians, Nicaraguans and Venezuelans to apply for entry and a work authorization if they had a financial sponsor and could pass background checks. By the time Biden left office, 530,000 people from those countries had entered the U.S. under the program.

Justices Ketanji Brown Jackson and Sonia Sotomayor dissented. “The court plainly botched this,” Jackson wrote, adding that it should have kept the case on hold during the appeals.

Friday’s unsigned order is not a final ruling, but it is a strong sign that Trump’s order will be upheld. The majority would not have lifted the judge’s order if they thought her ruling was correct.

Assistant Homeland Security Secretary Tricia McLaughlin called the decision a victory for Americans.

“Ending the CHNV parole programs, as well as the paroles of those who exploited it, will be a necessary return to common-sense policies, a return to public safety, and a return to America First,” she wrote in a statement.

It was the second time in two weeks that the justices upheld Trump’s authority to revoke a large-scale Biden administration policy that gave temporary legal status to some migrants.

The first revoked program gave temporary protected status to around 350,000 Venezuelans who were in this country and feared they could be sent home.

The parole policy allowed up to 30,000 migrants a month from the four countries to enter the country with temporary legal protec- [See Ruling, A6]

UC leader backs foreign students amid crackdown

Incoming Riverside chancellor’s remarks come as government moves to revoke visas.

By Jaweed Kaleem

As the Trump administration moves to revoke Chinese student visas and increase vetting of all foreign students, the incoming chancellor of UC Riverside — who grew up in China and came to America 40 years ago to study — is speaking out.

“It is imperative for the federal support of international students and research to remain consistent so the U.S. will continue to drive the world economy in the generations to come,” S. Jack Hu, who was named this week as the first Asian American chancellor of the Riverside campus, said Friday. “And it is my hope that Chinese students will continue to feel welcome to come to the U.S. and experience the same life-changing opportunity I experienced.”

The UC Board of Regents announced Hu’s appointment on Wednesday, shortly after Secretary of State Marco Rubio said in a statement and social media post that the U.S. would “aggressively” cancel visas for an unspecified number of Chinese students, who make up the largest slice of the 1.1 million foreigners enrolled at U.S. campuses. Rubio said that revocations would include those of individuals with “connections to the Chinese Communist Party or studying in critical fields.”

The timing — and Hu’s own history as a Chinese international student — has amplified his voice amid growing tensions as the fed- [See Chancellor, A8]

Language altered for COVID shots
CDC posts new guidance saying healthy kids may get vaccinated, instead of that they should. PERSPECTIVES, A2

Texas oil firm hit with injunction
Court’s ruling orders Sable Offshore to stop its work on pipelines. CALIFORNIA, B1

Weather
Partly sunny.
L.A. Basin: 85/64. B8

USC, UCLA take huge first steps
Trojans’ bats mash in a 13-1 laughter over TCU. Bruins crush Fresno State 19-4 in the NCAA regionals. SPORTS, B12

Taylor’s version of Swift justice
Pop star regains control of first six albums after drama. BUSINESS, A9

7 85944 00200 5

Every story. Every section. Every feature.
Subscribers get unlimited app access. Download now.

